

THE CAMBRIDGE HISTORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE

AOTAME AITI

THE AGE OF DRYDIN

LORDOR Cambraige University Press PATTERLAND

OTHOROY MEDY WENT SARDAM ATTUDIAD YARKOR Maraille a TOETO

Maranas Company Ltd Opposite the Desired Printers

All rights processed

THE CAMBRIDGE HISTORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE

EDITED
AY
SIR A. W WARD
AND A. R. WALLER

VOLUME VIII
THE AGE OF DRYDEN

CAMBRIDGE
AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS
1954

First addition 1911

How improvemen 1930

Charp addition (acut only) 1922

Reprinted 1934

PREFATORY NOTE

The Cambridge History of English Literature was first published between the years 1907 and 1918. The General Index Volume was issued in 1927

In the preface to Volume I the general editors explained their intentions. They proposed to give a connected account of the successive movements of English literature, to describe the work of writers both of primary and of secondary importance, and to discuss the interaction between English and foreign literatures. They included certain allied subjects such as orstory scholarship, journalism and typography and they did not neglect the literature of America and the British Dominions. The History was to unfold itself "unfettered by any preconceived notions of artificial eras or controlling dates, and its indements were not to be recorded as fine."

and its indgments were not to be regarded as final.

This reprint of the text and general index of the History is baued in the hope that its low price may make it entity available to a wider circle of students and other readers who wish to have on their shelves the full story of English literature.

CAMBRIDGE

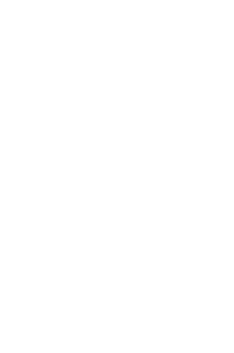

Chap. XL	Platonists and Latitudinarians By J. B. MULLINGER	page 2	178
XII.	Divines of the Church of England 1660-1700 By W. H. HUTTON	9	93
XIII	Legal Literature. I By F J. C. HEARNSHAW	8	306
	II. Selden : Table-Tall. By SIR A W WARD	8	121
ZIZ.	John Locke By w R. SORLEY	3	28
xv	The Progress of Science By A. E. SHIPLEY	3	146
XVI	. The Essay and the beginning of Moder English Prose By A. A. TILLEY		68

CHAPTER I

DRYDEN

THE Age of Dryden seems an expression as appropriate as any description of a literary period by the name of a single writer can be, and yet, in one sense, it is a missomer On the one hand, can ue, and yes, in one secure, it is a missionier. On one one many, in the chapter of English literary liktory which more or less opreces the forty years between the restoration and the opening of the eighteenth century not only is Drydens the most conspicuous eguicenin century too vary a mysters and most consequences personality but there are few literary movements of importance personally one mero are not medaly movements or importance assume the leadership, and which did not owe to him most of what vitality they proved to possess. On the other hand, as has been rithity tooy proved to possess. On the other many as the took again and again pointed out, Dryden, of all great English writers, again and again jointed out, Dryucz, or an Steat congular winces, and, more especially of all great English poets, was the least and, more especially of an great ringular parts, was two reasonighal, the least capable of inspiring his generation with new originar, and scene capeants or inspiring on generation with new sources of emotion, even of producing now artistic forms.

Many currents of thought and feeling carrill now at many rooms. Analy currents or shoulders and receiving any control of the power of his suggested to man of one ago were supplied by the tower of one senion with an ampoint of unpreconduct strength more than one literary form, offering itself for his use at an incheste, or at one memory ment, outsing most me use as an inclusive, or as a relatively advanced, stage of development owed the recognition a reasured sursaices, stage or obscurpations over see the which it accured to the resourceful treatment of it by his master Whether or not the dobt which his extraordinary prodecivity as a writer owed to the opportunities given him by his decertify as a writer owen to one opportunities given man by me times can be taken into account as against the transformation of times can oc taken onto account as against the transformation of the material by his genius may be regarded as a question open to debate. There cannot, however be any doubt at all that nother can Drydens own achievements be appreciated apart from the influences of his age, nor is any Judgment of the literary mont use muscaces or mis ago, our as any Jungment or use mercury produce of that ago, as a whole, to be formed without an estimate produce on that age, as a name, so we to men attends on continuous for the dominant factor in to an evaluation to it being reparties as the commant factor in the result. Thus, in an attempt to sketch, once more, the course of his literary endoavours, it would be fathle to detach their

CONTENTS

Chap. L. Dryden By sir A. W WARD	page 1
II. Samuel Butler By w F SMITH	58
HL Political and Ecclesiastical Satire By G. W. PREVITÉ-ORTON	80
IV The Early Quakers By EDWARD GRUBB	101
V The Restoration Drama, I By r r schilling	115
VI. The Restoration Drama, II By CHARLES WHIBLEY	140
VII. The Restoration Drama, III By A. T. BARTHOLOMEW	178
VIII. The Court Poets By CHARLES WHIBLEY	198
IX. The Proceedy of the Seventeenth Century By GEORGE SAINTSBURY	292
X. Memoir and Letter Writers. I. Frelyn and Pepys By R. B. WHEATLEY	241
II. Other Writers of Vemoirs and Letters A. By H. R. WHEATLEY	. 201
B. By SIR A. W WARD	260

Chap. XI.	Platonists and Latitudinarians By J. B. MULLINGER	page 27	3
ZIL	Divines of the Church of England 1860-1700 By W. H. HUTTON	29	/3
XIII.	Legal Literature, I By r J C. HEARMSHAW	80	10
	II. Selden a Table-Talk By SIR A. W. WARD	89	1
XIV	John Locke By w R. SORLEY	82	8
xv	The Progress of Science By A. R. SHIPLEY	34	9
XVI	The Essay and the beginning of Modern English Proce By A. A. TILLEY	1 36	8

OHAPTER I

DRYDEN

'The Age of Dryden seems an expression as appropriate as any description of a literary period by the name of a single writer can be, and yet, in one some, it is a mismomer On the one hand, in the chanter of English literary history which more or less covers the forty years between the restoration and the opening of the elebteenth century not only is Dryden's the most conspicuous personality but there are few literary movements of importance marking the period of which he did not, as if by right divine, assume the leadership, and which did not owe to him most of what vitality they proved to possess. On the other hand, as has been again and again pointed out, Dryden, of all great English writers, and, more especially of all great English poets, was the least original, the least capable of inspiring his generation with new idean of discovering for it new sources of emotion, even of producing new artistic forms. Many currents of thought and feeling successed to him by his age were supplied by the power of his senius with an impetus of unprecedented strength more than one literary form, offering itself for his use at an incheste, or at a relatively advanced, stage of development owed the recognition which it secured to the resourceful treatment of it by his masterhand. Whether or not the debt which his extraordinary productivity as a writer awed to the opportunities given him by his times can be taken into account as against the transformation of his material by his genius way be regarded as a question open to debate. There cannot, however, be any doubt at all that neither can Drydens own achievements be appreciated apart from the influences of his age, nor is any judgment of the literary produce of that age, as a whole, to be formed without an estimate of his contribution to it being regarded as the dominant factor in the result. Thus, in an attempt to sketch, once more, the course of his literary endearours, it would be futile to detach their succession from the experiences of his personal life, largely determined, as these were, by political reaction and revolution, and by other changes in the condition of the country and in that of its intellectual centre, the capital.

John Dryden (he wrote his name thus, though, before him, the spelling was varied both by his kinemen and by his parents) was born 9 August 1631 in the paraonage home of Aldwinkle All Saints, near Oundle in Northamptonshire, of which his maternal grandfather Henry Pickering, was rector1 His parents were of good county descent but his father Brasmus Dryden, was a younger son with many brothers and sisters, and his estate at Blakesley, on the other side of the county (near Canons-Ashby the family seat), which afterwards descended to the poet, con siderably burdened was valued at sixty pounds a year in the money of the time. He appears to have resided generally at Tichmarsh, the chief seat of his wife a family near Oundle. On both the fathers and the mothers side the future laureste of the Stewarts was connected with the parliamentary side his mother's consin-german, Sir Gilbert Pickering, was one of the judges of Charles I (though he dkl not sit on the final day), and, afterwards. became chamborlain as the protector Oliver's court and a member of his House of Lords1 After receiving his early education either at Tichmarsh or (as is the more usual tradition) at Oundle grammar school. Dryden-at what precise date is unknown-was admitted as a king's scholar at Westminster where he was trained under the redoubtable Bushy In a note to a translation of the Third Satire of Persons, published by Dryden in 1693* Dryden states that he remembered translating this satire at Westminster school for a Thursday-night a exercise. The direct infinence which exercises of this kind, vigilantly supervised, must have had upon the formation of his style as a writer of English verse is obvious but, though Dryden surmison that copies of his translations were preserved by Bushy none is extant, and the sole poetical relic of his Westminster days is his contribution to Lackrymas Husarum (1649), in memory of his schoolfellow Henry Lord Hastingsa small volume, whose black bordered title-page heralds not less

[?] See a valuable article in The Seturator Review 17 April 1875, emitted. The Birthylams of Dryden, which, bendies commanding what is known as to the leculities of his birth and shifthood, gives an associat of most of what remains on record conserving his kith and kin.

It would seem to be this für Gilbert, who, in The Medal of John Beyes, and almwhere, is hold up to score as a committee-man or sequentrator than thirty three elegiac pleces, by Herrick, Denham, Marrell and others. About Drydens jurenile elegy, much that is unperfinous has been written it was not wonderful that a schoolboy poet should exaggerate the last teste into which the followers of an artificial school of poetry frequently lapsed but the verses also give proof of that rapidity in connecting thoughts (the versesness of with and that felicity in expressing them which were among the chief characteristics of the formed style of Dryden.

The translation of the Fufth Saure is inscribed to Bushy

In May 1650 he was admitted as a Westminster scholar at Trinity college, Cambridge, whence he matriculated in the follow ing July Of his college career nothing is known, except that, quite early in his third year of residence, he underwent a not very serious disciplinary pentialment. He took his B.A. degree in January 1654 but did not proceed to M.A., which degree he only obtained in 1668, when it was conferred on him at the king's request by the archibishop of Canterbury (Sheldon). It appears, probably on his own authority? that he continued in residence at Cambridge till 1637, but there is no cridence as to the date when he began his life in London, though he may be concluded to have done so before the death of the protector Oliver (September 16.8).

Cambridge would not seem to have functioned the imagination, or to have enchained the sympathies, of an alumnus destined to hold a prominent place in her long list of poets. In the earliest years of the second half of the century, the university had much to suffer from the assendancy of the sermy and may even momentarily have trembled for its existence. During Olivers protectorate, however when the university was represented in parliament by his son Richard, it began to revive under a more tolerant regime. Drydens family connection was, as has been seen, with the party in power, nor was his a nature into which the iron of political tyranny was likely to enter very deeply. But its quite unaccessary to seek for explanations of the preference which, a quarter of a century later, in one of the several prologues.

by Chrutie to have been 1661.

³ See, beckles the notorious allestons to the small-por, the concluding apostrophs to the young bert's betrothed.
³ There is no orthonous to reprort the arrestion of Shadwell (in The Model of John

Beyon that Dyrien, having traduced a soldenian and an artifact cartification, survey secret expelsion from his soldenian source and artifacts cartification, survey secret expelsion from his soldenian from his soldenian on The Laurence of However (1616), stind by Maloon,

Life of Depters p. 17 Depters is spokes of as a name of sever pear's teaching at Combridge. He had himself a hand in this pumphlet.

The date of the particular Projects of ms praced in 1644, is notify conjectured.

addressed by him to the university of Oxford, he avowed for it, as Athens, over his own mother university. Thebes—nor need this preference be taken very seriously. And, in any case, it is quite out of keeping with his usual indifference to such attacks to suppose that his colloses towards Cambridge was due to a caption Cambridge pamphlet (which, by the way, was published at Oxford), The Cessure of the Rots on Mr Drydess Conquest of Granda (1673) while equally little importance attaches, in this connection, to the statement of Dennis (a Cairus man) that, about the same time, not only the town (London), but, also, the university of Cambridge, was very much divided as between Settle and Dryden, the younger fry in both places, inclining to Elkarsh.

In 1654 soon after Dryden had taken his bachelors degree, his father died, and he became the owner of the small patental criate. From the time of his residence at Cambridge, either before or after this errort, hardly any literary remains have come down to us. Dryden, as Malone points out, had no share in any of the collections of contemporary Cambridge verse printed during his period of residence. On the other hand, from the first year of his undergundantship date the pleasing lines, peoully signed J Dryden of Trin. C, prefixed to a volume of Epigramus (1650) pet forth by his friend John Holdesdon, who, unlike Dryden himself, was moved to seek reputation as a poet

before the dewn begin

To peop, so yet, upon [kie] smoother skin.

And a more personal interest attached to a copy of verses forming part of a letter written by him, in acknowledgment of the gift of a silver inkstand, to his count Homor the daughter of Sir John Dryden, the head of the family They are, as Scott points out, in Cowley a fantasete and farfetched style, and are not altogether pleasing. For the superstructure of a supposed attachment and blighted hopes which has been raised upon the orklence of this letter, there is not a tittle of proof.⁴

³ As Christie points out, the post, in transmitting to Rosberter another Freieyes addressed to Athenian judges six months surfice and asserting, faire alie, that yearty which is in Order made.

An art, in Lendon soly is a trada, abserved to his pairon hew easy his to pass anything upon a University 2 Ottol by Saintsbury G., Dryden (English Men of Letters), p. 66.

⁸ To be sore, one of the two helreness of Dryken's second acted play The Rival-Ladius, in passed Hessecks, and one of the stories included by Dryken in his last important work is Bessected's tale of Thredere and Hessecks. To be sure, too, Hesset Dryken, though also inherited a large portion, sever margine.

When, in 1657 or 1658, Dryden took up his abode in London, to which, with the exception of occasional visits to Northamptonshire and other easily accessible parts of the country, he remained faithful during the rest of his life. Cromwell's rule had, for some years, been firmly established and Sir Gilbert Pickering was in full possession of the great mane favour. That the young Dryden actually became 'clerk or secretary to his influential kinsmen rests only on the late evidence of Shadwell's lampoon1 But no special connection of the kind with the protector's court or person is needed to account for Dryden's first public appearance as a writer with A Poem upon the Death of His Late Highness, Oliver, Lord Protector of England Scotland and Ireland first published separately early in 1659 and reprinted in the same year in company with an ode on the same subject by Thomas Sprat (afterwards dean of Westminster and bishop of Rochester) and some lines by Waller Upon the late Storms and Death of the Protector Sprat's is a not undignified effort in a style in which he acquitted himself so well as to become known as Pindaric Sprat, and contains a daring figure afterwards appropriated by the master of the species, the incomparable Dr Cowley! Waller's tines, as usual with him, beat out the gold of a single thought into very thin leaf. Dryden, on the contrary whose poem was again reprinted in 1659 revised, and under the title of Heroick Storage consecrated to the Memory etc., surreyed his theme with not less circumspection than ardour and chose his topics of enlogy pot only as Scott says, with attention to truth, but, also, with a manifest desire to avoid hyperbole. Even the fine passage > finch was our Prince, yet owned a soul above. The highest sets it could produce to show cannot be consured as an exaggeration, except by those who deny that Cromwell was a great man and, as such necessarily greater than his deeds. The poem, though still studded with farfstched and not always appropriate conceits (e.g. War, our consumption, at XII 'Bolognias walls, at XVI the death of Tarpeia, at XXIV, shows Dryden already controlling the form chosen by him with a certainty not to be found in his juvenile efforts, and master of an overpowering directness which was to become

In The Model of John Bayes (1022).

He hrought them to the Borders, but a Second hand Did settle and secure them, in the promised Land.

The penuty above that Sprai's tribute, like Dryden a, was iniculed to meet the eye of Oliver's executors one of his most notable characteristics. Thus, the Heroick Starsus, though, necessarily, they attracted little attention at a time when the immediate future absorbed public interest, and though their author naturally was willing to allow them to be forgotten, hold a permanent place among his poetical achievements.

Dryden's working days in the scryles of the muses had now begun. With his very modest income, and without any family interest that could be of use to him, he can have looked the world in the face in no very senguine mood and, indeed, a certain reserve and lack of satisfaction in life and in the work which he had to do in it is noticeable in his writings, as it seems to have been in his personal bearing. Shadwell's sneer that Dryden had turn d fourneyman to a bookseller probably applies to a rather later period of his career and may be an illustured percersion of an insignificant fact? But, in any case, Dryden till he had studied his brief and taken up his pen, was devoid of the political, and, still more, of the religious enthusiasm which might have sufficed to insuire him as a writer and few poets have ever been less manifestly moved by apontaneous lyric impulse. What he wrote in the earlier part of his literary career was, as it were, automatically suggested by the great changes in contemporary public life, to which his literary powers, growing surer of themselves in each successive trial, responded without any apparent hesitation.

As there had not been any signs of ardour or strong personal conviction in the Herock Starnas, so, when the restoration of the Stevart monarchy had been accomplished as the only feasible termination of the crists, and when Dryden, once more, went with the times, he went with them in his own temperate and reasoning way. This may certainly be arrerted with regard to the substance of the pacan sounded by him on the occasion of the return of Charles II. For sithough, in Astracas Redize (1660), he did not shrink from any extravagance in picturing the popular joy and the hopes in which, now Times whiter series is begun, the subjects of Charles II indulged, yet, the royal qualities on which he enlarged as warranting these emotions were those which the king actually

His grandeur he derived from beaven alone. (St. vr.)
When alonet, yet we compared in his right. (St. xxrr.)
He made us frommen of the continent. (St. xxrx.)

² The bookselder is stitled, in a noise, to have been H. Harringman, who kept him at his beares for the purpose. Depths seems to have looked over Harringman's above into the the Funds, and Retringman was the publisher of the powns of hir Robert Havard, Depths in third excitation, and Retringman was consideration was presented.

possessed, or at least, was anxious to display—prudence in adversity, and elemency in the day of success. At the same time, he abstained from personal abuse, either of Cromwell (for the comparison to 'the bold Typhoeus cannot be set down as abuse) or of any other leader of the rebellion. There is, of course, much audacious misuses of the classical and Scriptural illustrations in which this poem abounds but that was part of the 'noble style which is essential to courtly panegyric. The general spirit of the poem is merely that of frank timeservice, though the shameless apeatrophising of the rechristened Naschy which had carned some of the naval laurels celebrated in the Heroick Stansas, as now no longer England's shame, must be allowed to call for severe censure. The genies. The genies of the poet shows itself not only in magnificent aberrations, like the comparison to the star of Bethleitem of the star that had shone at Charles III is birth and now shone again.

Guiding our eves to find and worship your

but, also, in exquisitely graceful turns of expression, to which the metre suits its music with inimitable case, such as the tribute to May, the month in which the king was born

Tou and the flowers are its necessar earn?

Nor are characteristic strokes of wit wanting, like that on the grief inflicted by Charles IPs departure to the Putch (against whom Dryden was beginning to cultivate an irrepressible dislike?)

True surrow-Holland to regret a King!

On the occasion of Charles II's coronation (1601), Dryden was ready with another 'panegyric, again in herole couplets, To His Sacred Mayerly congratulating him on his pacific intentions in convoking the Savoy conference (not yet a declared failure), and on his improvements in St Jamess park, where the mistrostful foul so harm suspects, he sale are all things which our King protects, as well as on his approaching marriage. With this piece of pure solution—mersum succ—may be mentioned the lines To My Lord Chancellor offered to Charendon on New Year's day 1662, in which the conceptious of derived greatness and original merit are skilfully mixed, but, as is perhaps explicable, without any great expenditure of personal sympathy. The Verses to Her Royal expensioners of Personal sympathy. The verses to Her Royal Highwess the Duckess (Clarendon's daughter) belong to a later HURANES LEE DECREES (LEAVENDON'S CANGINGS) DESIGNS to a later date (1655) and, apparently were not known till printed with the uate (1660) and, apparently were not above an printed with the preface to Awans Murabika, in which poem are sing the praises pressed to Assens attracting in which poom are sing the praises of victorious York. As might be expected, they show a marked of victoryous rors. As might on exponent, and show a market sorunce in concentrated rigour or parame, thought not rains any where to the beauty of the passence, justly singled out for praise where to the occurs of the passed of them and the fortunes of Saintahury which then seemed to summarise the fortunes of

¹ The staphasized use of the proposal year because one of the notes of Dryden's

See Extre on the Dutch written in the poor 1962, which, ten years later Dryden trugally utilized for the prologue and oplicans to desloyer.

The whole of the first group of Dryden a poems may be said to The whose of the life group or lifteens poems may be said to be brought to a close by Armus Mirobills, or The Year of Wonders oe crought to a cross up a news structure, or 10s 1 cm of 10 monters (1860) but, before the production of this work, he had already Clarendon's troogh out several plays. It was not improbably in this way orought our several plays. It was not improventy in aim way that he was brought into contact with Sir Robert Howard, a uns no was prought mo contact whin the notices noward, a younger son of the earl of Berkshire, who had long been connected. younger son or the eart or horsamire, who may any used compaced with the Stewart court and whose wife was a daughter of the with the blowars court and whose wife was a cangiller of the great lord Barghley On 1 December 1663, Dryden married lord greek form numbers on a meaning of the second of the secon Decremires usugater cannotem, then twenty are years or ago.
The marriage took place with her fathers comment, and lady Ellenboth seems, sooner or later to have brought her husband some addition to his estate. She was no doubs, his superior in This but not in any unusual measure. That Dryden was not at this time I wallow the life of this time, leading the life of a bookseller's back is shown, (after alia by his election, in November 1602, as a follow of the Royal Society in its early days often as much of a social as of a oversey in the carety using tenests on minute of a second as on a second of Dryden's marriage and second for the droumstances of Dryden's marriage and wedded life, whether actual or failtions, were an inextangible fund of scandal to the malerolenk. One story ran that lady Elirabeth's brothers had bullied Dryden into the match another that it was made up to cover a faux pers on the part of the lady with another man. It is clear that she had led no cloistered life but Dryden seems to have been throughout on easy terms with Sir Robert Howard, even during their literary controversy and sufficiently acknowledges his personal goodwill. The general over review was crew can command peak, res.

¹ Charendon's early correcting of the Muses in members of the orthogonal and the orthogonal Bases led there is no reason for empering a substance to protein compositions.

The immediate means of Dryden's alsohan may have been the laser addressed by 3 he humanical assum of largester assume may move men turn these seathware of the latter year. To my Economic Princial Dr Charleton, on the learned end coupled than in this year. To my Economic Princial Dr Charleton, on the learned and coupled of which we have no immediate. Note in Data year 10 mg Common grand by Commons, on the service and surgice World, and some performing this of Sunnahard by him External to the tree World, and some performing that of Sunnahard by him common and the service and the servic Fresh, and more perturbancy like of Financiary by the Errica to the tree Typesiare, which may be assumed up as rather financiar order of Basic and some President, where may be presented up as trainer somework lake Eastleb adentifie [waitesfee at the expense of Aristalia.

a See below predicted to Amend Mirabilla.

character of Drydens long married life remains obscure it has been freely described as unhappy and in its last period cannot but have been darkened by his wife a mental decay on the other hand, there are indications in their correspondence of pleasant and, there are moreautions in mear correspondence or pressure relations between them. That the hisband proroked or required the wifes infimities of mind or temper by infidelities is a conthe wires manustees or mind be compactly mindentees as a conjecture resting on an assumption for the assertion that Dryden

Annu Mirabilis, though not written in the heroic couplet Annes attractits, though not written in the period coupled with which Dryden had already familiarised himself in both when when the poor in the subsection of the substantial and non-dramatic composition, of the substantial proof of the case and self-confidence which by this time he had already or the case and sent-commence which by this time he had already scoulined as a writer of versa. The stanta form of decayllable acquired as a writer or verse. And scaling form of technylmond quatrains here adopted had already been used by Sir John Davies quarrants here anopied man arready occur used by an about reasons. In his philosophical poem Nosce Terpeson (1899), where it well and purposibility and pad peen taken it men and pad peen taken in an annoachnical boam takes technical (1988) where it men in an annoachnical poen takes technical (1988) where it men Armant in Gondibert (1856), where the poet, in order to satisfy D'Artenant in Commons (1200), where the press, in other to saturally should contain a period, often becomes prosy in consequence. For the rest, Gondibert, though composed under the critical eye of Hobbes, and compared by him campasson under the critical eye in thouses, and compared by and to the Asset and the Had, notwithstanding the advantage which to the Asserts and the Asserts Joing time, contained little that Invited imitation while the long and not uninteresting critical Profess, though it may have helped and not minuteresting critical arraytes, shought it may have not per to suggest the writing of those critical coars of which Dryden to suggest use writing in these crimes composed the carliest in the year before that in which dames Graphite appeared, clearly did not serve as a model for them?

like Gondilert, Annus Mirabilis was the fruit of exile but, while part of the former was written at the Louvie or come our while part of the former was written at the Louvie, Dryden had been driven from London, by the great plague and the great fire commemorated in his poem, to take refuge at his father in laws country seat at Charlton in Williahlre. In An Account of the Ensuing Poem, in a letter to Sir Robert Howard, dated

I The Exhaust W. G., whose letter is vol. ar of The Oretimes Magazine for The Calmore 9 U. whose Miller in vol. IV of the Urationes Alegerine for the Calmore 1786 (p. 29) mentioning that he remembered soning Daylan with the actures the Calmore Calm forcing FPO (p. vy) mentioning that he remembered nesting highest with the activate flame. Easier at the Helberry gardent, has been proposedly clied, makes the further Ann here at the Mathery Striker, has been repeately stied, make the further characters that he company he was the modes of man that ever coverand made a common absorbance of the modes of charaction that is company for was the modestern than that ever companies — not a source characteristic of libertines in general, or at those of Charlest days in Bee vol. 17 pp. 102-1. At to the metre, of pers, class. It Down No. 7: Ph. 167-16. As to the merry, at part, etc.p. it.

As to Granders, see east vol. 17, things it. part, etc.p. it.

Hobbert Parles of the second seedling about the second second seedling about the second s A to transport, see easy for fit, edgs, in. Hobber peaks of the every of the fit of the Construct and thinks, the front marican a daughter as an interruption of Lors, is discounted by its resemblance in its opening passages at all oracis, to the es acres, in emergence by the presentation in the opening parasecs for The Temporal Delwine Property Minanda and Periodale.

8

expensions the Duckers (Charendom's dangitter) belong to a later date (1686) and, apparently were not known till printed with the preface to Ansus Hierabliks, in which poem are sung the praises of victorious York. As might be expected, they show a marked advance in concentrated vigour of phrase, though not rising any where to the beauty of the passage, intilly singled out for praise by Balntabury which then seemed to summarise the fortunes of Clarendom'.

The whole of the first errorn of Dryden's noems may be said to be brought to a close by Annus Mirabilia or The Year of Wonders (1686) but, before the production of this work, he had already brought out several plays. It was, not improbably in this way that he was brought into contact with Sir Robert Howard, a younger son of the earl of Berkshire, who had long been connected with the Stowert court and whose wife was a danshter of the great lord Burghley On 1 December 1663, Dryden married lord Berkshire's daughter Elizabeth, then twenty five years of age. The marriage took place with her father's consent, and lady Elizabeth seems, sooner or later to have brought her husband some addition to his estate. She was no doubt, his superior in rank, but not in any unusual measure. That Dryden was not at this time, leading the life of a booksellers back is shown, sater alia, by his election, in November 1652, as a fellow of the Royal Bociety in its early days often as much of a social as of a scientific honours. The circumstances of Dryden's marriage and wedded life, whether actual or fictitious, were an inexhaustible fund of scandal to the malevolent. One story ran that lady Elizabeth a brothers had builled Dryden into the match another that it was made up to cover a fame pers on the part of the lady with another man. It is clear that she had led no cloistered life but Dryden seems to have been throughout on easy terms with Sir Robert Howard, even during their literary controversy and sufficiently acknowledges his personal goodwill. The general of which we have no knowledge.

Dryden

³ Cineradon's early countries of the Mason is mentioned at the notice of theorems but there is no reason for respecting a reference to portical ecospositions, of wide we have an invertedra.

3. Our oriting our from lefe dealining area, sin.

³ The immediate same of Dryhan's duction may have been the inner addrawed by then in this year To you Henevied Friend Dr Charless, on his inversel and script Works, can have particularly this of Reactions by him Research to the true Fundary, which may be remained up as a nither shallow using of Record and some leave English photonicis from themse on the expense of Articolia.

⁴ Bee letter predicted to dame Murabilia.

character of Drydens long married life remains obscure it has been freely described as unhappy and, in its last period, cannot but have been darkened by his wifes mental decay on the other hand, there are indications in their correspondence of pleasant relations between them. That the husband provoked or requited the wife's infimities of mind or temper by infidelities is a conjecture resting on an assumption, for the ameriton that 'Dryden was a liberthy remains unproved!

Annue Merabilis, though not written in the heroic couplet with which Dryden had already familiarised himself in both dramatin and non-dramatic composition, offers unmistabable proof of the case and self-confidence which by this time he had already acquired as a writer of verse. The stanza form of decarvilable quatrains here adopted had already been used by Sir John Davies in his philosophical poem Nosce Teipsson (1599), where it well mits both theme and treatment and had been revived by D Avenant in Gondibert (1656), where the poet, in order to satisfy his principle that each quatrain should contain a period, often becomes prosy in consequence. For the rest, Gondibert, though composed under the critical eye of Hobbes, and compared by him to the Aenerd and the I had, not withstanding the advantage which accrued to these as dating from 'what is called old time, but is young time, contained little that invited imitation while the long and not uninteresting critical Preface, though it may have helped to suggest the writing of those critical casays of which Dryden composed the earliest in the year before that in which Annus Mirabilus appeared, clearly did not serve as a model for them!

Like Gondibert, Annus Mirabilis was the fruit of exile but, while part of the former was written at the Louvre, Dryden had been driven from London, by the great plague and the great fire commemorated in his poem, to take refuge at his father-in-law country sent at Chariton in Williahire. In An Account of the Enzumy Poem, in a letter to Sir Robert Houserd, dated

¹ The mainters W G., whose believ in vol. 27 of The Gratianest's Magazine for Perhamy 1785, by 95, sentiming that he remarked sening Dryden with the actives know howeve at the Melberry particult, has been repeatedly stead, scales the further stearwish that its company he was the modulated use that they recovered described the senior distributions of principles of those of Charlest days in particular.

[&]quot; fee vol. rr pp. 165-2. As to the metre, ef. pest, chap. rr.

As to Gondilers, one case val. vm, shap. vm. Helder's grains of the story of Gondilers and Births, the great magician's daughter as an inocorparable description of Love, in discounted by its resemblance, in its sysuing pranages at all exents, to the screen in The Tropper Diviness Proposes. Mencals and Fordingson.

November 1000, Dryden, although he utters some heterodox opinions about Versil declares that he has been my master in this poem, which, indeed is distinguished by a measurable of tone and a richness of imagery that lend force to the amertion. The admirably chosen title was not original, though the application seems to have been new? Dryden describes Ansaus Marabilus as a historical poem, apparently implying that it does not make any pretensions to being an evon for which it lacks both the requisite unity and the requisite length of action. On the other hand, it treats its twofold theme, the Dutch war and the fire of London, with great skill, both in the selection of tonics, and in the management of the transitions which give coherency to the whole. As for the war its final cause lay in the commercial jealousy between the two nations, which made itself felt wherever English mercantile enterprise was seeking to compete with that of a more successful rival, and which, of course, came home most nearly to the city of London. But it was also due to a general antipathy on the part of the English against the Dutch, as of the naturally stronger to the actually wealthier community Dryden, accordingly takes care to dwell on the strength of England, as contrasted with the meanness. basences and so forth, of Holland. Moreover the upper class of English society was offended by Dutch burgherism and republicanism, while the court resented the act excluding the house of Orange from the stadholdership. When, therefore, war was declared a good deal of enthusiasm (of a kind), especially among the gentry halled the event, and Evelyn gives an amusing description of the outbreak of a universal passion for taking service in the fleet. Dryden in his proface, describes that part of his poem which treats of the war as but a due explation on his part for not serving his King and country in it. The navy as the favourite service of both the king and his brother the dake of York, was, at

¹ See Souver, Trect. vol. vol. vol. vol. vol. vol. vol. to a notion of pretanded prophosion as to the fire of London, related is have been printed in 1810; et 1620. In the assessmentaries interest, under the title done. Meraktic primer it seems Fren. I fill second of the proceedings regions of France S table. and others a supposed to a concerned in the printing of Northild downs or the Two of Predigin and France, printed 1511, as printed Expressional Table 1819. [1810.].
Northild State of Northild downs or the Two of Predigin and France, printed 1511, as printed Expressional Association of Law 1812. [1811.]
Northild State of Northild downs or the Two of Predigin and France, printed 1511, as place Expression and Development and Law 1812. [1811.]
Northild State of Law 1812. [1812.]
Northild State of

this time, extremely popular, and Dryden's confessed anxiety to have his sea terms correct was podantry in season.

Altorether, his account of the progress of the war-from the dearly bought victory' of Solebay to the barren triumph off the North Foreland -is full of fire and spirit and it was not any part of the poet a business to expound how, when the campaign of 1666 came to an end, the feeling began to spread that, with or without further naval victories, the situation of the country, against which France was intriguing in every part of the king's dominious, would, before long, become unterable. Thus, when Dryden represents the terrible visitation of September 1666—the destruction of the far greater part of London by fire—as having befallen England at a season of undiminished confidence, and as a namesis of this national pride-he is putting a gloss of his own upon the actual sequence of affairs. He had moreover omitted any account of the planue, whose ravages were at their height at a date considerably earlier than that of the events described in the introductory part of his poem, and had thus made it causer to represent the fire as a calamity which overtook the nation when 'palled with the long succession of its 'joys. The fury of the fire at its height is depicted with splendid enemy and the daring floure of the witches sabbath. danced by the mosts of traitors who have descended from London Bridge", is not less apposite to the wild scene than that of the divine extingulaher by which the fire is put out is preposterous. The poets prophecy that a greater and more august London would arise from her fires was fulfilled but the companion political prophecy had a lamer ending in the peace of 1607 which was all that England gained from the glories of the wonderful year Yet the literary achievement itself was wonderful. Without the assurance to be derived from any great previous success, Dryden had undertaken a task so full of pitfalls that nothing but a most extraordinary impetus could have carried his course past these to its goal—and this, though he had hamnered himself with a metrical form which, as he knew and confessed, had made a far more exacting claim upon his ingenuity and skill than the couplet

¹ The imperis of easurem Siress for the dash of admiral Sir John Lawson are of a place with the mermality access at the end of The Bartle of the Baltle and must be searched or extelled in the company

⁸ This was the occasion on which de Buyler (when Dryden compares to Varre at Canasc) savid his ships, as has been observed, in order to self up the Hadway with been abolithed day.

That they then conted themselves on the root of Whitehall is a supposition due to a perferent subprint in st. 221 pointed out and servered in Regeneral's children of Perfeat Percent (1919).

performance, which cast into the shade its lesser features, its far fetched conceits and other reminiscences of poetic schools that were nearing their end could not but apprise the critical world including king and court, that a combatant had descended into the arens who was unlikely to find an equal there.

Meanwhile, like most of his would-be rivals, he had formed a connection with the theatre, and continued to maintain it. In his thirtieth year, on the very morrow of the restoration, Dryder made his carliest known attempt as a playwright. His dramatic productivity elackened very much during the latter half of his literary life but be cannot be said to have ever wholly abandoned this form of production indeed, in his very last year he contributed some new matter on the occasion of the revival, for his benefit, of one of Fletcher's plays. Within this period, he tried his hand at most dramatic forms in actual use, and, for a time, identified himself with the most conspicuous new development. In view however of the ameriton deliberately made by him in his later days that his genius never much inclined him to the stage, and of the general course of his literary career which shows him rather falling back from time to time on play writing than steadily attracted by it the fact that he was the author in whole or in part, of nearly a score and a half of plays, would be surprising were it not for the extraordinary promptitude and adaptability of his powers. It will be most convenient, before returning to his other literary labours, to survey briefly his dramatic work as a whole. Its fluctuations were largely determined by influences which he could, indeed, sustain and develop, but into which, except in the instance of one transitory species, he can hardly be said to have infused any fresh life so that his plays, as a whole remain after all, only a subsidiary section of his literary achievements. The principal currents in what, according to a rather loose terminology it has been customary to call the restoration drama. will be discussed in other chapters of the present volume and what is said here is only so much as is necessary to make the reseral course of Dryden's productivity as a dramatist intelligible

Inamuch as the primary object of the London stage, when reestablished with the monarchy was to please the king, his court and its surroundings, and, inasmuch as, in that court, many besides the king himself had acquired a personal familiarity with the

¹ See A Diseases concerning the Original and Progress of Sathre (1878) (Escaye, el Est W P. rol Ci p. 87).

French stage and its literature which, at all events in his case, dated back to the earlier years of his exile, French influence upon the English drams in the restoration age was almost as a matter of course, both strong and enduring. But it is equally certain that the basis from which the English drams started on the reopening of the theatres was no other than the old English drama, at the point which it had reached at the time of their closing. Beaumont and Flotcher, and the drama of transcomic romance which, through them, had for a generation before the closing of the theatres, established their supremacy on the English stage!, were the favourities there when the theatres reopened nor had either Jonson or Shakespeare been forgotten, and the former was still, though the flow of humour among his followers had begun to run dry, regarded as the acknowledged master of comedy. The dominant power on the French stage down to about the middle of the fourth decade of the seventeenth century had been that of Hardy, whose most celebrated play Marianna, dates from 1610 and whose rooms did not begin to give way till after his death in 1031 Now Hardy, like the dramatists who gave the tone to English dramatic literature in the generation before the closing of the theatres, kept the French stage popular by means of the mixed species of transcomedy, and thus prevented it from falling back on the academical lines of Senecan tracedy represented by Garnier It is true that he was warming in his bosom the great reformer of both French tragedy and French comedy, who said of himself that, in his earlier plays, he had no guidance but a little commonsense and the examples supplied to him by Hardy , but Cornellies epochal production of Le Cid did not take place till 1838 (Medie appeared only a year earlier) and Le Menteur which stands in much the same relation to the development of French comedy as that held by Le Cid to the progress of French tragedy, was not produced till 1642. Thus, though Part I of Le Old was brought out in an English translation (by Joseph Rutter) in 1037 and Part II (in a version in which Richard Sackville, afterwards earl of Dorset, is said to have had a share) in 1640, both being republished in 1050 it seems clear that the main influence exercised by the French upon the English drama was due to Hardy and tragicomedy which dominated all the French dramatists-including Rotron.

³ As to the long life of remarkie tragiconedy and its servival after the restoration, see the half expedition to Retine, F II., Espitab Tragit-County its Origin and Russey (No. Tark, 1910), chapt. v and r.

⁹ fine Ripal, E., Alexandre Hurdy et la Thildre Français à la fin du FFfre et en commement du FFIret effet. Paris, 1899.

whose work synchronized with Cornellie s carlier dramatic labours When, however the perennial conflict FI renewed under new Nom, nowever the personnel country was renewed under the conditions and on reasoned principles by Cornellie, a lother and constitutes and on reasonal pensatures of continue, a source and more logical conception of tragedy approved itself to the French more repeat conception or tragenty approved tower to an extension public and perfected in practice by the singularly refined erineal public and, periodica in practice by the angularly remove and sensitive genius of Racine, French classical tragedy reached its and sensitive general or anome, excute communicative general and distinct species of dramatic literature. The consummation as a unitner species or unamatio morature, the beginnings of Molière (though more than one of his plays have an regimmings or sources (mongo more came one on an pays mare an earlier date) may for our present purpose, be placed in 1658, when, earner cates may not our present purpose, so percent in took when both as actor and writer he first appeared before Louis XIV and both as actor and writer no new appeared octors bound ALY and his court. It was not long before the English drams, in the hands an every to was not only served the impression made on it by these or net just and outside forested two impression made on it by tures developments, the effects of which, whether direct or indirect, will be numerised in later chapters; but they should not be will no some they were, the starting points of our

Of special importance for the progress of the English drams, Or appears importance for the progress or the Lighten orans, both before and after the closing of the theatres, was the influence of pros fiction, operating either directly or through plays for of prose nation, operating causer carectly or through plays for which it had familished material. The two literatures which here which is and tarminated inaterina.

And two interactions which have the spanish and the French perfection the herday seemed to have possed array as, in the screntcenth century artificiality of taste outabaway as, in the seventeenth tentury arthuranty to taste organish influence, more will be said inned its rue. Concerning opinion minutate, more will be substantiate a while it is not unfrequently difficult to substantiate a traditional derivation from a Spanish play the direct indebtedness traditional derivation from a optimizar peay the direct intercontrols of English dramatists to Spenish proce fiction was, beyond doubt, or regular unamounts to opening proper action was, reports aware considerable in extent, both before and after the restoration. remortance in extens, over tends and after the resourance. French proce fection, on the other hand, in the course of the extententh century paned through an entirely new phase in its serenteenth century Jessey unrught an entirely new passe in the very directly influenced an English history and, measured as this very directly inducated an angual dramatic species with which Dryden was, for a time, identified, dramatic species with wince tryven was, for a time, mentioned, reference must be made to it here. With the Astrée of Honoré d'Uric (1810-2) began a literary morement representing in the a price (torontal) technical a mergery movements representative as sentiment and expression which had been incompatible with the turbulence of a expression which has been incompanies with the televisions of a long epoch of civil war. This movement culminated in the school he per, thep. v m. and svii.

He ame part, thep. vvii and svii.
He ame part, thep. vvii and st. Ward, Hist, of Anyl Dr. Lil and m. pp. 1879 E. For other extension we Hill, H. W. La Calproolsh. Economics and the Economics. For easy sensonmer on 17th, 12. In an empression com-Drame in Laurenity of Nevada Sindade, al. II (1910), p. 2.

of romance associated with the name of La Calorenède and, still more largely, with that of Madeleine de Scudéry the authoress of Le Grand Cyrus. Comberville and the comtesse de La Favette belong to the same group, but that lady's last and most celebrated novel. La Princesse de Olives is already differentiated from the creations of Mile de Scudery by being, to some extent, based upon historical fact, towards which as a writer of memoirs, the authorees had a leaning. The romances of this school invariably turned on the pivot of heroic love, or love in more than the usual number of dimensions, and, though dealing with the deepest of human emotions, they never fell out of the tone of elaborate conventional formality They were, in some instances, translated into English or imitated by English writers, from the commonwealth times onwards. when no doubt, they had been welcomed, in many quarters, as alternatives to the drab dulness of everyday life! and after the restoration, as will be seen, they supplied themes to dramatic writers whose object it was to heighten and intensify the characteristics of stare romance. While prose fiction, of this class, continued to attract English readers to within the last quarter of the century, in France, a reaction had already set in towards simplicity on the one hand, and entire, on the other but, in these directions. English dramatists were not, at all events at this time, prepared to fallow

It was then, under these influences, that Dryden gradually settled down to the particular forms of dramatic composition which he chose from time to time, and in no regular succession, to make his own, and which he frequently filtuatrated by signally suggestive proce commentaries, written with consummate grace and case in the form of dedications, prefaces or essays, thus bringing his dramatic productions into harmony with rules of good scate endred from established theory and, still more largely, from approved practice. Dryden a plays would often loss much, if not most, of their interest if read without reference to their prefaces and other critical apparatus, neither however is it advisable, except in a few special instances, to detach these from the texts which gave rise to them.

In the actual year of the restoration, or at all events, within a few months from that date, Dryden, perhaps stimulated by the use

¹ Des Derrolly Oblertes & Letters (ship mt], LCSI frees Chichesach, where Let Cléarites and Let Grand Gyran report to have been the habitude companions, and Propriet Darry T Describes 1020 (when he mat up till middlich reading Faller's Allary, while she wide, whose devotion to these resources he did not charges as forecast in Great Gyran); 1 st. As to the chief Legisch translations and imilations of these Pyrach remasers here, per, chap. 274.

made in the commonwealth period of quasi-dramatic dislorue as a vehicle of political entire or invective, proposed to himself to read a political lemon to the public by means of a historical tragedy The Duke of Genee, applying the doubtful parallel of the Catholic learne to the recent memories of puritum seemdaner But the attempt was not thought successful by judicious advisors, and what had been written of the play was left over to be utilised by the author in the tragedy which many years later in 1632 he produced in conjunction with Lee. Thus, the first play by Dryden produced on the stage was The Wild Gallant, first acted in February 1603. It has no further claim to be singled out among the comedies, at the same time extravagant and coarse, in which the neried of dramatic decline abounds, though there are some traces of the witty dialogue, often carried on by a flirting counts. in which Dryden came to excel. The statement in the prologue that the author was endangered by a Spanish plot (i.e. a rival 'Spanish play) has been perverted to the direct opposite of its meaning and the most humorous incident in the piece is conveyed straight from Ben Josson! The play did not find favour except, apparently, with lady Castlemaine and, in the sequel, Dryden only intermittently returned to comedy proper He wrote of himself, early in his dramatic career, that he was not so fitted liv nature to write comedy as certain other kinds of drams. he wanted, he confesses, that galety of humour which is required to and he also wanted as he might have added, the facility of invention-whether of situations or of characters-which relieves the productions of a comic dramatist from the sameness which is noticeable in this class of Dryden's plays. He consoled himself with the notion that a renutation cained from comedy was hardly worth the eccking for I think it is in its own nature, inferior to all sorts of dramatic writing. Thus, he only returned to it from time to time, and wholly eschewed farce, which consists principally of grimaces" and from which he naturally shrank, devoid as he

¹ As to those publical speths in demantic force, of Richies, F. H., w., pp. 531—2, B. Cl. peac, dalp. v. The Equation just in quanties was tall of Tehrit deventures of Five Brenn. Ct. Redern Larguage Visse, vol. 20. (1901), p. 164. Pitementical Edity Bloding of Speakla Literature, p. 951 had already polated out that RI Galdon communication, which was exposured in his tree comprised Depring Polatical Conference on the Conference of the Co

A Defence of an Every of Descentick People (1962) (Everys, ed. Eur vol. 1, p. 116).

But also, the declimation to descept 2-1s where he localy conducent that mone of the occasion-provide here, even in his own partial planest, sublems him in spency.

Bon Trelans to An Kerning's Love (Coneys, ed. Ker. vol. 2, 3. 125).

may generally be asserted to have been of any inclination to what was grotesque, or even merely odd or quaint. And, in the critical energy and excurances which filestrated his practice, he discusses the comic drams with comparative rarity.

The Wild Gallant was written in proces as was Sir Martin Mar All, or The Feigned Innocence (1667, printed 1668), an adaptation by Dryden, whose name was not attached to it till thirty years later of the duke of Newcastle's translation of Molière's early comedy L Etourds, with certain touches suggested by two plays by Quinsult. The translation is not close, nor the treatment refined, but the play was very successful. In prose is also the main portion of The Assignation or Love in a Nunnery (1672, printed 1673), worthless, except where in some blank verse passages it rises to a higher literary level. Marriage-à-la-Mode (produced at the same dates), which unlike The Assignation, greatly pleased the town, thanks to the admirably drawn coquette Melantha, presents the same mixture of proce and blank versa. Of Dryden a remaining comedies, Limberham, or The Kind Keeper (acted in 1678), which is entirely in prose, has unmistakable dramatic merits but it was speedily withdrawn, having been judged a gross libel on a well known public personane, generally supposed to be Lauderdale? Dryden's last comedy Amphitryon (produced so late as 1600), for which both Plautus and Mollère were put under contribution, is, again, a mixture of areas and blank verse, none of Dryden a plays more brilliantly attest his literary gift, and none have more of the wantonness to which he afterwards pleaded guilty

In Dryden's second acted play The Rivol-Ladies (acted 1804), be had already passed from comedy into tragicomedy where his genlius was more at home. Its complicated plot (two indies diagnise themselves as pages in order to take service with a gallant whose affections are act on a third) caused it to be supposed, rightly or wrongly, to have a Spanish origin, its dialogue falls into the stagery autitions which, though it was as old as Shakespeare, The Rehearsal and Butler' were to ridicule without mercy. What, however is most noticeable in this play is the first, though all tentagire, me of rime as a proper feature of dramatic versa. This use is defended In a dedication to lord Orrest—the earliest of Dayden's critical excursions. It should be remembered that, since Flotcher's short Preface to his Faith all Shepheardesse (printed 1809 or 1810), such discussions of dramatic problems as these had fallen out of me, and that the public was now neither railed into approbation, as it had formerly been by Bea Jonson, nor gently led on to acquicecence in the precepts of its critical guides. Following the example of Cornellie Dryden took advantage of the revived interest in the stage to address its patrons, as it were excathedre, but without an assumption of academical solemnity or rigour To the subject o the dramatic use of the heroic couplet which he here brouched, h afterwards returned at greater length, both in his Essay Q Dramatick Possic and in his Essay of Heroick Plays but he did not claim the innovation as primarily his own, and he recalled the fact that the rimed five foot couplet, in a form approaching as near as possible to that which it owed to Waller had been first applied to its noblest use by D'Avenant in the quasi-dramatic Steps of Bloodes (1656, enlarged 1699). Dryden, however was the first to employ the rimed couplet in the dialogue of an ordinary stage play though he, too, only introduced the innovation tentatively Etherego went a ricp further and, in The Conneal Recomps, or Lore is a Teb (acted and printed 1664), put the whole serious part of the play into heroic complete. Insumuch, however as, in the same year 1084, ford Orrery's Heavy P which is entirely in heroic couplets, was performed, Etherege and he must be left to divide the crown of having introduced the innovation with Dryden and D'Arenant. If it could be proved that Orrery's first play mentioned in king Charles's lotter of 22 February 1662 was Heary V there would be no doubt as to Orrery's priority over

¹ See, however A Defence of the Epilogue (Emeye, ed. Ker vol. 1, pp. 173 ft.) when Deplete criticises Senson, not without a certain secretity; the comparison between French and English scenely in An Emer of Departics Passe passin; and preface to An Errolage Love already cited.

⁸ Scandal was very kny with Landsrelak's grivate as well as his public seconds; bothers is softling convincing to the carimeters. Others thought it (atomded for his his his was attacked in similar fashion by Orway.)
Reporters between Cat and Pass at a Caterwoodies?

It does not seem to be necessary here to enter into a reexamination of the question of the suitableness, or unsuitableness

I first past, p. 23.
San Singert, E., Espan Royk Earl of Overry a solar Drawn (First Settings)
For East, Philhoppi Vising and Lapide, 1906, p. 18. Overry thinsel to here For Engl. Financial Vision and imprec. 19th P. Lin. Comp. community within his facedy. The Blank Friday in a new way. By which he means the these without a set to the play was not send (III 1007 or Printed III 1609 P here. stephen I are turn buy was not never the risks were part performed in 1864 and erry and Aurogem, which were discreased in some, were not pursuant to one and 1645 supposed by Tanas and As in Ethersey, for whom Genne (Erronbert). 1443 superating one part, p. 42, 2000. As in a case up, no wants to previous and the first to early est, flower that he was the first to early est, though tracing assume, we story to easy traces tone on we can ame so easy was known. Drylers was the first to propose, the experiment of writing ordinary your income are pure, alap, y of the herole couplet as a form of dramatic verse. Hot only in certain kinds of remantic comedy for which it has been claimed as a suitable rehicle, but, also, for various eccentric species which have been or may be invented—such as pantomime, burlesone or extravexanm-it may readily be allowed to be both well fitted and effective. As to its use, however, for the purposes of the regular trade or comic drama, the case is altered. Partly of course, the objection lies in the tendency of the counlet, as treated by Dryden and his successors to make aminst continuity of flow, to shut up the sense within fixed limits and because of the consegment demand for precision of statement, to impart to dialogue or soliloony a didactic rather than dramatic colouring. And, further with regard to the use of rime itself in English dramatic verse, the careat of Taine cannot be put aside, that 'rime is a different thing for different races the Englishman being transported by it into a world remote from the actual, whereas, for the Frenchman, it is nothing more than a conventional costume! The beroic couplet, as used in Dryden's plays and those which followed their example. therefore, operates against, rather than in favour of, theatrical illusion and the away of the imagination on the stage, and belps to urge the dramatist who employs it in the direction of con ventionalism and artificiality. Against this general result, it is meless to argue that ression, and even mere elegence, at times gets the better of the outward form, and, by its driving force, mores and disturbs the hearer in spite of himself.

No sconer had Dryden, in The Rival-Ladies, produced a tragicomedy, containing an element of rimed verse, in which he had made successful use of his gift of poetical rhetoric, than he was characteristically ready to take a leading part in evolving an ulterior dramatic species not precisely new, but with features of its own so marked as to differentiate its from trajecomedy proper. The trajecomedy bequeathed to him and the restoration dramatists in general by their predecressors was wont to possess a double plot, constiting, to use Drydens own phrascology, of one main design, serious in kind, executed in verse, and an underplot or second walk of comical characters and adventures subservient to the chief fable, yet carried along under it and helping to it although, in point of fact, the connection between the two was frequently very light. At different stages of his career, he produced three more

I Hit de la Littérature Angleier bl. III, chap II, est. tr

³ A Discourse sometroung the Original and Program of Sattre (Knope ad. Ker vol. 11, pp. 1024).

plays' of various merit, which belonged to this class. Secret Lore, page to rations meet, such colonged to this class. Course area, or The Maides Orien (acted 1667), of which probably because of the frank galety of Nell Gwynn s scenes in it—Charles II approved the trans gatety of their transparence of the main plot, on as greated as we use it is party as eventually as we have many fave, on that Comid underplot, Parily on that romance and parily on the same novelist's libraries, on L illustre Rossa. The interest in the serious plot is impaired by the quite unheroic character of Philodes (intended, as Dryden says, t represent queen Christina of Sweden's favourite Magnus de L cardle) and the chief attraction of the play consists in the discountre passages between Celadon and Florinel. In The Spanish Fryar or The Double Discovery again (acted and printed opurates regul or and average assertions again (according to have been designed as a tragi consedy by Dryden, the comic effect preponderates over that of the serious plot, though the latter cannot be said to be without the statement the of the two has been praised—perhaps oretrailed—by more than one eminent critics. The comic overpranect—or more than one enthers critic. And counts dialogue of this play is excellent, and the character of the triar by no means a replica of Fletcher's Spanish Cherale (though there of no means a relatest or recomer a spential current (months made to plays), but a new raisety of are points to rescribesing in the two pasts, out a new variety or an increase type which, from Chancer to Dickers, has afforded an annuous vipe success and unich it must have given omatum congue to the priority and which is more than a consistent hatred, arriven, who makes in case and parama when a commencer makes and the state transformed, Lore much secure of the sould present a supering sould be soul Triestphane, or Actors was Frence (actor 1004), in wasca there is a large admixture of rime, merely repeated in its main lette is a surge assurance or some mentaly repeated in the manning field that of Marriage-d-la-Mode, and the play jurily proved a

Dryden, as already noted, had not brought out more than t Direct, as arrang notice, man not prought out more than a plays, in the second of which he had made occasional use of ti pays, in the section of which we must make occurations use of a rimed fire foot couplet, when he was found ready to sailet h rance are non couples, when he was sound ready to assure a brother in law Sir Robert Howard in the composition of what ma be described as the first herolo play? The shortcomings in the

But follows stoward, who was also a posturate and a piccomma, argued seek as a filterioral and political writer and answer the poets as I playwright of the are. He hitsireal and pointed writer and among the posts and playwrighted the age. He country TAC Committee (ICC) intrinsic are past from the delays of the posts party and a second to be posted to be according to the country consent 7 he Community (ICC) instituted as pass facts the delays of the parties party when he poster. Of the large-line for which he was coledy responsible the most

Merricant let Made of which the main interest lies to the cords action, has been A Marting-dutation of which the main interest lies to the contain arises, has some final hors among the consider. Short supports that it may have been all first may be a first support of the contained of the co realment fore among the comments. Soot suggests that it may have soon at arms and the play best that one offset of The Echanical was for hadron the author to recent the piece. Dyrica Manual In A Perilli of Perey and Perilling (1835) refuses to defined 724-

Special Figure a title score, and declared in the first to be those of the fourty of the first of the fourty and declared the first to be those of the fourty which is fas resisteral mingie (Lee vol. II. p. 117).

Sift Robert Downed, who was doe a political and a phonoman, fixtured helds as a

The

sourcest that it was submitted by him for revision to Dryden, whose erroerior skill in the handling of the couplet he freely confessed. Though devoid of any kind of interest except that which this and later heroic plays sought in the remoteness and consequent strangeness of scene, The Indian Queen was successful and Dryden was thus encouraged to write a 'sequel to it under the tille The Indian Emperor, or The Conquest of Hexico by the Epaniards (acted 1955), by which the success of the new species was established and his own reputation as a playwright defini tively assured. His other plays, which, both in form of verse and in treatment of subject, fall under the same designation, were Twommick Love, or The Royal Martyr (acted in 1668 or 1669), the two parts of Alman.or and Almahide, or The Cononest of Granada (1000 and 1670) and Aureno-Zebe (1676). It will thus be seen that the number of heroic plays by Dryden was small, and written at considerable intervals. The earlier of these breaks (1605--8) was largely due to the closing of the playhouses in consequence of the plague and the great fire. The later (1670-6) interruption was, no doubt, partly caused by the appearance of The Rehearsal (1070). Although that celebrated burlesque cannot be said to have killed heroic plays, there can be no doubt that, notwithstanding the brilliant features which some of these plays displayed, the elements of vitality were wanting in the species. The list of plays which, as written partly or wholly in the rimed counlet, have any claim at all to be reckoved as heroic, is small in itself, and, if reduced by certain obvious omissions, contains, with the exception of Dryden a few works of even secondary significance. In a word. Dryden completely dominates the English heroic play interesting in The Great Parawrite or The Duke of Lerma (1868), of which the matter was taken from recent hirtectum. Six Bobert Heward, who had kept himself as prominent so he sould in life was buried in Weststlorter abbey. He is the Critic of An Enery of Drumstick Pareir; Shadwell ridiculed him under the last courteous appellation Bir Pacitice Atall. Ille brothers Edward and James likewise wrote plays; the former was author of The Unerper (1868), a tragedy in which Oliver Cromwall was represented to the character of Damoules, and Hugh Paters appeared as Hage de Petro : the latter purpetraied a version of Romes and Julies (1602) with a happy ending, which was performed on alternate nights with the extastrophs. James Howard's comedy 4E Misteless (printed 1872) was acted before Charles II at Trially enliege, Cambridge in October 1567

I See the list in appeality D of Chase L. N., The English Heroic Play (New York, 1909). Derides Otway Crowne and Lee (for certain of their plays), only leed Orrary Sir Bobert Heward, Elkanah Settie and Banks seem to still for consideration. Of the latter two, something will be mid showhere (see post, shap, var); as to Orrory a note may be subjected in this place. Reque Beyle, such of Occasy whe, as lord Droghill, played a part of some importance in Angle-Iriah relations, is, in theretere, 22

Like The Indian Emperor Tyrannick Love treats with much freedom a theme out of the common track—in this case, the personnies of the Cintetians by Maximin and the martyroom of Bt Catharine. The argument of Aurong Zete deals, again quite treely with a notability of the writer's day though largely fol lowing the course of Racines Mithridate, and borrowing the matter of one scene from Le Grand Cyrus. On the other hand, matter of one scale near the order of prices of bridges a heroic plays. The Congress of Granada, is constitutly based on Madeleine de Souddry's Alexande, while one of its episodes is taken from her Le Grand Cyrus and another from her Ibrahus. But the important point is that these subjects, as treated in the plays in greation, all resemble one another in their substance, and more or decadent an resource one another in their substance, and, more to the his adjuncts. The plays are all of them heroic plays, and the metre which they employ is called the heroic couplet, because the moster water tries cannot be carried the nervice couples occursed the follow and imitate the example of hereic romance, as set they follow and imitate the example of herore romance, as see forth by Arlosto himself:

Their themes, like those of herore poetry and fiction in general, are the emprises and conflicts of absorbing human passions—lore, Jealousy and honorit—all raised to a transnormal height and expressed with a transnormal intensity! Their men and women are, if the term may be thus applied, supermen and supersonen, and their maxier possions are superiore and and supersource, and their market parrious are superiors and appearance and superiors and their out-of-the-way promises flow a number of ont-of the-way results. The actions must be suited to the or out-of the way results. And actions must be superported changes and chances and templitons backgrounds, their complications must be insoloble except by violent means, and deaths as minorous as meet weather as the author of the remains Portherine (1661-66). As a dramatical then return as the attime of the remains / fortaining | 1644-665. As a demantic, the first and uniformly though the relevant with demands with the contract of he is fried and uninteresting, though his relayest were necessary varied and treated in the approved herein style, and though he was not unstitled in the same of the complete in the approved herois styre, and though he was not exterior in the one of the company which he address (see very distinctly) to have dry most on the rings. It is most effective to the company of the c which he dathed (not very distinctly) to he we dry more on the rings. His most effective by which precises, Memorial (663), blue from an effect in Georges de Scouley? May was, pricings, Messayake (1665), bless from an opened in Company do Scouldard Branched on Matadom' (1665), bless from an opened in Company do Scouldard (1665), bless from the pricing distance of Company do Scouldard (1665), bless from the control of the con Brakke (Bandad on his stance 'Donasses); his most interesting drawn, The Shade Prime.

Make all Growy's plays, in herois warm, was seen seen all 1867. The Shade Prime was seen all 1867. The Shade Prime was seen as the seen all 1869. The Shade Prime was seen as the seen all 1869. his all Occupys plays, in heroic twen, was not need 401 1807. The Illinois of Heroic tasks and with an act of heroic run tocksides and the part of Octoo Thoday was Pyte, where mean with an art or invited you exceed the part of Own Theor, was the earthest produced by Certary on the wides, and probably the marinal written by Man. On success produced by Orriery on the rings, and, Probably the sections system of the rings, and probably the sections system of the rings of the ri smanty Rel is was too late. (For a full account of him, one Empty L. a.)

See the magnificantly reductive passage in do Every of Hermal Party (Roman

- The Company of the Company of Hermal Party (Roman

- The Company of He I fine the magnificantly and actives passage in the Energy of Memory Party (Brough and Energy of Memory of Memory of the Series of the August Series of the of Eur vol. 6, p. 160]. I spended the arri bank that by by me, whom was an Arrown in Labour 1 and the very first two lines of that power five me Richies all I send desired.

When I british a History says me of the shareful relation on the contract of t Fig. 1 forms a finery says one of the sharevers in Chile | I like | I shows one and the part of the pa leaves in Vallombross. Furthermore, the personages of these leares in Valiombross. Furthermore, the personages or these dramas must conduct themselves in a manner wholly unlike the dramas must conduct themselves in a manner whonly musto the mages obtaining in the daily round of life it must be a manner 23 nages outsiming in the using round of the imagination alone can trainsappropriate to spheres into water the imagination atone can trans-plant us—ancient Rome, Jerusalem, or Troy, or still better because pant us—ancient mone, servicem, or rivy, or sum occur securios still less familiar Mexico or the east Indies. Finally the verse, as ann see minuter statics or the cast indice. Finally the verse, as well as the words, must be suited to the action, and the heroic want as the worth, must be surface to an action, and the nerview complet must serve the purpose of a sort of cothurnated, which is interpreted stillted, speech erpreted states, speccu.

It was inevitable that a succession of plays of this type should It was meritance that a succession of plays of this type anoming and pall upon the spectator because of the sameners of their soon put upon the spectator occasion of the sampless of their method (one of Dryden's most persistent assallants, Martin Cilford, method (one or 1770cm s most persuants assumed, martin camoru, accused him of 'stealing from himself'), unless each new proaccused mm of steaming from number A timess each new pro-duction sought to force the pace, and to outrie its predecessors. discuss sought to force one pace, and to outrie as producessure.

The interest in the action, cut adrift, as it was, from probability The interest in the action, circ aurit, as it was, from precasulty which probability begets, had to be anand from the sympactry which producedly begund, and to be sen-tained by all sorts of adventitions expedients—supernatural range by an sure or automatons experimens—supernatural apparitions and magic processor, with fastestic songs, serenades apparitions and magic processes, with national source, and dances. But, notwithstanding the resources of Drydens and cances. Dut, notwittstanting the resources of Diffuents theorical genius, and the wonderful mental buoyancy with which the carried out any thak undertaken by him, the species was to carried out any take dimerciance of and, and species was decided to self-exhaustion, nor can its master long have deceived himself on this head.

Dryden a spologetic Essay of Herouck Plays was preceded in date of publication by his Europ of Dramatical Poene (1969). written in reply to Sir Robert Howard's preface to his Fours News Plays (1605). The earlier exact is in that dialogue form which Figys (1000). The current energy is in that managere norm which had preserved its popularity in the literatures of Europe since it had been revised by Ernsmus and others in the remacence period, with which Dryden a age was familiar from both Spanish and French precodents, and which was practised by many contem and which was practised by many contem French precounts, and which was practiced by many content porary English writers, including Clarendon and Burnet. But porary enguin writers, incurum currentum and normer, nut there can be little doubt that Dryden derived the most direct there can no fittle doubt that triples derived the composition of the compart in dramatic and other inpute to the composition of the carry in gramatic and other literary criticism with which he carriched the library of English literary criticism with which no currents the instary of regular prose from the three Discours severally prefixed by Cornellie to prose from the three volumes of the 1660 collection of his plays, and the the three roomes of the same cultion, preceded each drams?

All this is Pri at length in some reliable paper statistic Deplete a benefactor of the Printers of Printers of Section and the section of the Printers of Section and the section of the s All this is per at isorth in some valuable papers stilled. Dyden's becomes to a contributed by Haddhasser, P., in Employed Statics, vol. 3—411 (1894—1911). Ann, complessed by Hatchadasse, P., to Explicate Studies, Tide, 2—231 (1889—1871, 1 See Rev. L. Littchartico, P. 2237), as in Martin (Illing, Tide, 2—231 (1889—1871, Tolkalas from allow French archive) archives Martin (Illing, Tide, 2—231 (1889—1871)). of pilecies from other Franch critical writers.

Dryden's famous casay is written with great spirit, and with a fusion of rigour and case altogether different from the riractiv by which liberary critics appealing to a wider public at times by much further appearing to a much produce at the case may be. The dialogue form is employed with Platonio grace. and on the manager the sound of the same discharged in the battle of folelay and andible in the Thance like the noise of distant thunder or smallors in a chimney The conclusion to the time as a control of the same time as based upon experience, albeit the latter was necessarily of a very limited range. As a matter of fact, Dryden's opinions on most antifects and not the least on dramatic theory were sufficiently field to respond without reinctance to the demands of common some nordid be ever take pride in a decreative or cummersome nor up no over case prime in a coverance of constitution of the second of Nanoder o (Apo tobacourt Dividens oan stors) lend to the conclusion that observation of the timehodopred laws of dramatic composition, 22 contential worlded by extensions may be marked approached to the principle of the unitles as severally interpreted by Cornelloin paneting to the antices as societary interpreted in constants.

Is recognished with the greater freedom of treatment assumed by the masters of the English drama while the plea for the use of the the couplet, hased on its dramatic capabilities, especially in the furnedlate occasion for Dyviens Essay had been the the importance occasion for property part over the confession of a doubt by Sir Robert Howard (who as Critical contemou of a none, or our moves movere (wao, as once, reproduces it in the dialogue) with regard to the appropriateness represents in the native management and regard to use appropriate comments of the rimed of the fact in which he can formerly maked four or the removatropers in measure wise. Annually carine report to different to bis play The Great Fatowille, or The Parts of Lerna (1993), without losing the temper as why about he hare done except to give grounds for the pereitlent mirripone nave uone careps to give grounds ne une personal quarrel t-Dryden would be the controlled by A Dyland of the Elect of Draws would be no communicated to the second edition of the Indian fee Foeric though pressed to the section culture to the relations of which, however be omitted it This piece, which is an admirable example of light raillery though This piece, when is no numerous examine or negative relief the previous force. of his argument but the incidental remark that poetry only As a serie the electron of the Energy is pily second up by the tiples is Dryden Preligio to Recre Lay (1007);

The Screen waterles, and a mingled chine Of Japan 5 meren and Country three instructs as it delights explains the fallers of many attempts made to defiance of the truth conveyed by the saying.

The Conquest of Granada. The Rehearsal 25

The Computet of Granada (1669—70) may be justly described as the heroic play par excellence, and exhibits Dryden as exultantly carrying through a prolonged effort such as only the splendid vigour of his peculiar genius could have sustained throughout at so tremendous a pitch as is here essayed. The colouring of the whole is gorgeous, and the here, Almanor, combines, on Dryden a own showing, the impoung features of the Achilles of the Hiad, Tassos Rinaldo and the Artaban of La Calprendos Cléophira. Dryden had now reached the height of his popularity—it was in the year 1670 that he was appointed poet laureate. With an arrogance which Almanor himself could hardly have surpassed—though it is hidden behind the pretence that not the poet, but the age is resized-

the Emloque to the Second Part declares the dramatist superior to all his predecessors, including Jonson, in 'wit, and power of diction. The poets of the past could not reply but among the critics of the day who took up the challenge. Rochester for one. retorted with a rough to groome which is not wholly without point? Other protests may have ensued at all events, Dryden did not allow the hot iron time to cool, but followed up his rodomontade (for it deserves no other name) by A Defence of the Epilogue, or An Essay on the Dramatick Poetry of the last Age (1079), which cannot be called one of the happiest, and is certainly one of the least broadly conceived, of his critical efforts. Finding fault with a series of posseges in the chief Elizabethan and Jacobean dramatists was not the way to make good the general contention on which he had ventured. He appealed once more to his own generation against its predecessors but he was wise enough not to appeal to posterity

Meanwhile (in December 1071), the nemesis provoked by the arrogance of success had descended upon Dryden, though in no more angust shape than in that of a burleaque dramatic conceition by a heterogeneous body of witz. The Reheared, as the mock play with its running commentary was called, had gone through a period of incubation spread over nine or ten years, and among the contributors to the joke were the duke of Backingbam, Thomas Sprat (already mentioned), Martin Citiford, master of the

² Box, as to the date, Malone, Critical and Minetlement Proce Works of Dryden, rol. 1, part I, p. 87

² Cited in Septi. Saintabury edition, vol. pr p. 264

Charterhouse, a very learned and foolmouthed writers and, it is Chartermours, a tery restricts and communication writer and, it is said, though without proof, Samuel Butler. They included in their and months which seemed to offer them a chance in any of Dividens plays but they also impartially ramacked the proor influent plays but they also unpartially raissucked the pro-ductions of other dramatists. Indeed, it would seem that, before Organ, D'Arenant and Sir Robert Howard, had, in turn, been thought of as the central figures of the farce, and that it was only the triumphant success of The Conquest of Granded which had the components success of the Congress of Orthogon which has concentrated the attack upon its author. The recent appointment of Dryden to the poet laurestoship of course, suggested the name on arrives to the hampooners continued to apply to him for the rest of his literary curren t or non mercary cureer.

The Released, which, if the long line of its descendants, including Sheridan a Critic, be taken into account proved an important contribution to the literature of the stage, is an aspectate continuation to the most part forgotten productions, directified by humorous sallies of which the shart of bariesane always keeps a store for use. Its satire against heroic plays is avays acres a store for use, its same against across page incidental, except in so far as they carried artificiality exaggration and bombart further than had any other of the species of plays and continues turner man man any owner or one species or pusper ridicaled. Its author against Dryden himself glanced of, practically Assence. As setting a serious any och there was nothing to provoke derition, and from a Scenim to which no adversary could sentently measures a received to become terrates, and from a femine to a men no auternary count actions; importe potents of invention or american of workmandin. Thus, he napric potents of intention or sometimes of softananium, and, or was also to treat the same, so tat as it contribute and his retunded on with more or ions goodinated the company and the free from splite. As for heroid Plats, he certainly did not leave off writing them because of The Parts for excitating one for scale on arrang treas account of the scale of the scal In defence of the species. But he could not expect to outdo his in defence or the species. Due no cum now expects to come and no other playaright was likely to carrie of the anatomic and no other pulywrights was many to each to surpress him in a combination of treatment and form which nau anno permany na ona. In 1672, The Confact of Granada was published in company in 10/2, the conjunct of orthogon was provened in company with a prefatory every Officrosed Plays. The exay opens with the with a pressure of each of which Dryden was afterwards himself Transport, Ct Malma, and

I figure and that atherwards assured Settle to his Absolute Erroise or Arbitraphet terryword, Ct. Malmat, and.

9 He own made eccaderal the of the first of the free by an of Electrotics ; bet. a He even made securious absent the critical run of the price by we set illustrations; here, in his Discourse on Saint (ICM) he south to deposits the form of the miles, when, in his Discount on Eather (ICCI) he court to despective the form of the matter, by sea and very harpy on all heart presents rather sheems (rot, II, P. II). Early adding to the matter than the court of the court of the matter than the court of the

he was now you just you as beart, remainst rather absents from H. P. II have settled by Chan (The Employ Repub Person States).

Comments of the Change of th It is entiron that, in the areas must by Class (The Explicit Merric Play appendix C) these Arrevariah Extensions, enterly (1873) sufficient mand trackly there to help to refute—that heroic verse was already in possession of the stage, and that 'very few tragedies, in this age would be received without it. For the rest, this essay only develops propositions previously advanced, besides fearlessly engaging in a defence of the non plus silva of the heroic character type, Almanary, the Drawcanir of The Reheural.

It was not till three (or four) years later that Dryden took a final leave of herole tragedy with Aurest-Lebe, or The Greet Moyal (acted 1676, and printed in the following year). As the prologue, one of the noblest of Drydens returns upon himself, confesses, he was growing 'woury of his long-loved mistress, Rhyme, and, while himself abandoning dramatic for other forms of composition, inclined to 'yield the foremost honours of the stage to the early masters on whose want of refinement he had previously mainted. The play itself, while already less rigidly adhering to the self-imposed rules of the species, is visibly influenced by the example of the refinement and restraint of Racine.

Between The Conquest of Granada and Aurena-Zebe, Dryden had produced, besides two comedies already noted, a tragedy d'occasion, of which the plot is, indeed, as in a heroic play based upon amorous passion, but which was thrown upon the stage to inflame popular feeling against the Dutch (with whom the country was now at war). Amboung, or The Crudices of the Dutch to the English Herchants, a production unworthy of its author, was barilly written in proce, with an admixture of blank verse. On the other hand, in the opera The State of Innocence and Fall of Max (printed in 1674 shortly after the death of Milton) Dryden had, no doubt, taken his time in tagging the verses of Paradisc Lost for his dramatic version of the poem was meant as a tribute to its great qualities and not intended for performance on the stage any more than Villion's own contemplated dramatic treatment of his theme would have been. The Author's Apology for Heroick Poetry and Poetic Licence, which accompanies the published opera, does little more than vindicate for the trentment of sublime themes the use of a poetic diction from which convention shrinks but it is valuable, if for nothing che, for its opening definition of true criticism, which they wholly mistake 'who think its business is principally to find fault. The operatio version of Paradise Lost must be pronounced a failure, not the least in what it adds to its original; its chief interest in connection with Dryden's literary progress lies in his skilful handling of certain colebrated argumentative passages. With Dryden a remeasurement of Militon a greatest work may be compared his handling, before and after this well meant attempt of the Shakespearoun dramas. In the case of The Tempora, or The Exchanged Island (acted 1007 bit not printed till 1670), Drydens own preface, dated 1 Docember 1009 shows that the workmanship one present, under a recommendation of the second of the s was manus to active and a subject of the manuscript and the sample of th D'Avenant was owing the grotesque notion of providing a male connectant for Miranda, a state for Caliban and a female comcounterjust for attraction, a source for Common start a securate countenfor for Ariel and he would appear to have generally revised the work of his promper partners Quite otherwise, Drydens All for Lore, or Tas World Well Lost is not an adaptation of Antony and Cleopatra but a free treatment of the same subject Antony one treopensu von a treo treatment or the name subject on his own lines. The agreenide preface which precedes the on me own more two agreement preserve when precedure we problehed play written in a ciylo flavoured by the influence of Montaigno, which was perceptibly growing on Dryden, takes the manufacture, which was perception frowing on Military seaso are production, as it were, out of the months of the critics, and then turns upon the poetasters with almost cruel critics, and men tours upon two processors with some critically which may have helped to examperate Rochester oridently reactie, which may have helped to charperate increases of intenty the principal object of attack. In All for Lore, Dryden, with an the fauncies of states in an array array array are selected from the imitation of acto risomos as angus us, was revenue; men are manasses of French tragedy to Elimbethan models. The dramatist seems as fally as over to reacte to himself the freedom which be chims as tany as over to react to to minutes the recovers which so cancer as his inherent right. If he pays attention to the unities, especially to ms moreover right a no pays ancered to the more caponally to that of place, it is with more oxactness than perhaps the English that of piace, it is with more exactness than perials the regular hootic requires and, if he has discoundered binself from then it is not because he condenns his former way His purpose was to follow we may probably add to emulatopurpose was to income me may become and to unusate-Shakerpeare, treating the subject of a Shakerpearean tragedy in consequence, account two sources or a consequence in agent in the his own way uninvesionary our with periors increase. In the result, Dryden has little to fear from comparison in the matter of result, trythen mas since so tear from comparison in the institute of construction and, though, in characterisation, he falls short of his consuperiors and trough in componentation, no main personages are exemplar at an evenus so tar as the two main personages are concerned, there is much in the general execution that calls for

^{4 —-}Spite of all his pride, a mores shane laundes his breast at Hiskuspears's mared mares.
5 more magnatulmose Herrary confussion was never made.

Dryden

So, is act at pr. 1. the virious represent to Ere by the whitpersons of States. 1 St., In act at, se. I. the vision represent to Eve by the whitperings of Satura.

In 1872, They repose was thread into an open by Bladwall, who shifted the section. I In 1877, The T speed was thread total an opera by Shadwall, who shifted the persons and added brights at least one new room, as entury, new manages to shifted the persons and an experiment of the case. It is take and added brakes at least and are song as returnly new among at the state. If is their writing and say DA result and Dyrdon 6, Proposed in 1570, which was primate in the writion, and and D'Arenny and Drydon a Promed in 1870, which was printed in the 1871 and all subsequent editions of the restoration propert. This preliments of the restoration propert. This preliments of the subsequent and 197 and an entergonal estimate of the restoration propert. This prelification of a superincipal state of the property of the p

The Grounds of Criticism in Tragedy 29

the highest praise. He was conscious of his achievement, and declared that he never writ anything for himself but Antony and

Cleopatra 1

Once again, in Troilus and Cressida, or Trath Found too Late (printed 1670), Dryden concerned himself with a Shakespeurean play this time, however adapting his original plot with scant plety—in his own words, new modelling the plot, throwing out many unnocessary Persons, improving those characters which were begun and left unfinished, as Hector, Troilus, Pindarus and Theorites, and adding that of Andronache. It cannot be gainsaid that Shakespeare, for whatever reason, failed to carry through the action of his Troilus and Cressida with vigour and completeness but what he left was narred rather than mended in Dryden's adaptation, the catastrophe being altered and the central idea of the play the fickleuses of the heroine, botched in the process—and all to what end't

With this attempt, which must be classed among Dryden's dramatic fallures, was printed the remarkable Preface concerning the Grounds of Criticism in Tragedy, which, although not actually the last of Devden a contributions to dramatic criticism, may be said to complete their cycle. Here at last we find a plain and resecuable application of the fundamental Aristotellan theory of tragedy to the practice of the English drams. Shakespeare and Fletcher-the former in particular-are set down as deficient in 'the mechanic beauties of the plot but in the 'manners of their plays, in which the characters delineated in them are comprehended, the two great masters of the English drama are extelled at the expense of their French rivals. Although ex ception must be taken to the distinction between Shakespeare and Fletcher as excelling respectively in the depiction of the more manly and the softer needons, to conclude all, we are told. 'Fletcher was a limb of Shakespeare -tu other words, the less is included in the greater Thus, though neither of much length nor very clearly arranged, this comy signally attests the soundness of Dryden's critical judgment, with his insight into the fact that the most satisfactory dramatic theory is that which is abstracted from the best dramatic practice. It was not given to him to examplify by his own dramatic works the supreme freedom chalmed by the frestest masters of the art but he was not to end his theutrical career without having come nearer than he had as yet approached to his own ideals or as yet approximate to me own overall. From this point of view two tragedies may be passed by in which the unbalanced, but not wholly uninspired powers of Lee anno toe announced, our not amony annualized howers or recoperated with the still and experience of Dayden! October cooperated with the same and experience of refuser companies of the down a sector to to A though partition with an univerpres, tures upwar fulle challenge to both Sophocles and Cornella. In The Duke of Gauss (acted in Documber 1663). Dryden a share seems to have been mainly confined to the furbishing up of what he had written community reasons to the introduction of the carborate many years occurs "manerer us might say in the manusare principle of the Dake of Gauss (Printed in 1863), the political intention of the play as a picture of the now disconfited intrigues intention of the past as a picture of the most inscription of Shaffesbury in favour of Monmonth, was palpable, and not on consideration in mercut of neutronic was respected, and the disproved by the fact that the authority of Davila had been more uniforce by the lace that the authority of partial and bean indeed or less closely followed, or by the other fact that the parallel or sens current some respects, have been pressed further than would have been pleasing to king Charles

³ See A Parallel of Pretry and Painting (Emeys, ed. Kar vol. 11, p. 114).
⁶ Le vocking them up for stage purposes. Estimate played Trailes, and spoke the protoces in the character of the plant of Shakespears (Thomas Sections, by Love, It., p. 120).

⁶ Cf. Delien, M., Drydon and Shakespears, in Johntonk d. dramcken Sinkespears Describeleft, vol. er (1809).

In Albion and Albanus, Dryden committed himself to a still to a sure descent—hardly to be excused by the thought-depressing lower descent—narmy to be exented by Dryden (who, on this head agreed quanty or opera measures or version (was, on sum seem, agreed with Saint Erremond) in the interesting preface which gives a short stan count to remeate in two interesting provides a more private amount of the early history of musical drains. After many delays, account of the mental of minutes of minutes after many usuals, the chief of them being due to the death of Charles II, in comthe cuter of them using use to the death of Charles 11, in compuners to succe opera more over may pure register to new arrived that performed on 3 June 1683. Ten days later the news arrived of Monmonths landing at Lyme and the unlocky plece with its or Monmoun's amount at Lyme was two amousty piece, who has fingling times, music by L. Grabut and all, was finally withdrawn. Jugung times, music by a brack, and an, was many windings. Saintabury describes it as, to all intents and purposes, a masque continuous describes it as to an interna and purposes, a marque but it lacks all the beauties of which that kind of composition is purit meas an one menures or winter that aim of composition is complete, and which are not made up for by the grotesquely capting, and which are not made up for up the Stockaspect ridicalous supernatural machinery to which here, as in The Duke FORME, the author coordescended to have recourse. Dryden was so came, the annual contractions to make recourse. Arrivers was not, however deterred from carrying out his intention of writing non noncret accessed from carrying out are macrossed or enturing the dramatic opera of King driber or The British Worthy to the transmit opera of army arms or the stress from a which Albron and Albanius had been designed as a probabe. It wases account an amazone man over occupied as a presence as produced in 1691 with made by Parcell but, notwithwas promeen in 1001 with muse by Purceit out, notwice standing the claim put forth in the preface little or no proof is

I do to Lee, no peor chap rm.

The not very skilled peace, in hence of the hingy brother of Reserve , the not very called possing as assessed of the Empy services, (but y set, 1) small Le o bean funded as as a tribute in the date of York.

furnished of Dryden's familiarity with Arthurian romance and, in spite of the magic, there is not much fire in the piece, while the figure of the blind Emmeline is an unpleasing experiment. Perhaps, as the tag suggests, the poet was, for once, almost leader heart.

After the close of king James II's reign however two plays were produced by Dryden, which may be regarded as a worthy consummation of his dramatic development. Yet Don Sebastian (acted 1690) is incorrectly regarded as marking his emancipation from the traditions either of transcomedy or of the heroic play though it is blank verse which, in this piece, alternates with prose. On the contrary the serious action of Don Schastian is a remantic fiction an attempt to account by a love-story ending with a most astonishing recognition, both for the well known disannearance of Don Sebestian in the battle of Alcarar and for the rumour that he lived for some time afterwards as an anchorite. The comic action of the multi is repulsive, though noticeable as illustrating Dryden's assesses against all kinds of clergy! The only real attempt at drawing character is to be found in the figure of Dorax, particularly in a scene which has met with universal araises

Although the tragedy Ocomeness, the Sporton Hero (acted 1602) is not usually deemed equal to its predecessor it is finely conceived, and, on the whole, finely carried through on the lines of French classical tragedy without any comic or other adventitious admixture. The character of the hero (performed by Betterion), though probably modelled on Hengo in Fletcher's Bondress is drawn with vivacity and, in the earlier part of the rather long drawn out catastrophe, with pathos. Plutarch's abundant motorial is supplemented from other sources and though viewing Dryden a dramatic work as a whole, it is impossible to regret that he should not earlier have engaged in a wholehearted imitation of French tracedy his one complete attempt in that direction must be prononneed a noble play With it, our survey of his cureer as a dramatist may fitly end for it is unnecessary to do more than refer to the Secular Masque written by him, together with a prologue and epilogue, to grace the revisal, for his own benefit. of Fletcher's Pilgrim, which actually took place in June 1700 little more than a fortnight after the beneficiary's death. The tone of gentle pessimism audible in the masque recours in the one or scince remains and a marine manifer where, without the actinos; with which he had analled Quack Maurus (Sir Richard Blackmore) in the prologue be defends himself against the common preferred against the condemonstry drams in Jeremy Collier's Short View of the Immorality reminers of the Emplish Stape (1008) Dryden a defencethat the far as it goes (which is not very far is the eril influence of ways of thought and life brought over by a bankined court a far nobler attitude than this of measy spology had been the open around of shame made by him many years earlier in the ode To the Pross Henory of Mrs Anne Authorese (1686)

Deyden, with Cornellie and Recine in his one necessivates Chemistee.

Prints of all religious are the same. Abotion and Achimphel, part 2, v 92.
Act rv sa, 3.

3.70 the Prove signory of Airs Anne Autofrew (1000).

Dryden a association with the stage was not a source of pride to himself, and can be regarded only with qualified satisfaction by the admirer of his poetle gening. That he attained to a very notable degree of success in almost every branch of dramatic illerature which he cassed cannot be held surprising but it mas only in the heroic play in which he strained every nerve to was our in one necessive play in which he armined every our roand the most of the state of the same of t Dryden could not often put his heart into his dramatic composition, least of all into the comic side of it. He wearied of playwriting from the outset-frequently passing from one kind of play aring near the outer-nequency passing non-our ania to pay to another and lock again, but rarely suitated with any phase of to subtrief and these spain, our rarely substitute with any phase of the endeatours. When, after a long interval of absence he returned an successories in whose contests he had taken a prominent part, about whose theory and practice he had speculated widely and written at length, but which, at times, like Ben Johnson ho was led to call the loathed stage, it was with a sense of fatigued ket to can the most orerrorted and blast of uncountries and even use most oversonated and overso and oversonated to dig in those exhausted mines, would be slow to arow!

This of course, is not to say that Dryden failed to enrich English dramatic literature by much magnificent writing—more especially in his heroic plays—or to deny that at least one comedy in the second of the reasons which had made him strong weary of the Chatter, to know it has access what always and flavors, and handle has access what always all flavors had flavored the access what always had always to flavor the chatter.

Dyping hard belianced elisables on the subject is, purkage, that is the profits the purkage, that is the profits the purkage, that is the profits the profits that and the state of the sta Dyson fort balance with the second of problem of the problem of problem (Long), at East vol. 21, 57 272-31; but settler door the ring from the contract the contract of the contract the contract of the contract the contract of the contract is the Paths (Cheeps, at Lee Vol. II. P. 173—1); but are the to College Attack (and as to Province Investiga spatiar the Many New World A. W., Vol. 1997 and A. V. 1997 and As to College's attack (and as to previous investine spatiar) the start) as Ward, A. W.,

Horney & Espiral Demonstr Library, etc., vol. m., Fr. 200 ff, and etc., for an assessment

The Life at January College is red. I at the 1845 selfice of History of Explicit Demonstrat Librarium via, vol. 111, pp. 200 ft., and of, for an assumed at the sea between The Librarium via College was 1 at the 121 of the semi-property. The Life of Jacquey Collect is well t of the 1845 edition of the East-Addition t of tSmooth way. Since the reasons which had made him winerly wanty of the theaten.

ore) from his hand permanently hold their own among dramatic saterpleces of their respective kinds. It is of greater importance nat, in Talmes words, Drydens work as a dramatist 'purified and brified his own style by teaching him closeness of dialectics and recision in the use of words, that, in it and by it, under the uklance of Corneille, he learnt the art of political oratory and ebate, and, at the same time, attained to that mastery of the erole couplet of which he was to make superb use in his satirical coms. Dryden, who, in these poems, was to show an unsurpassed ower of drawing character rightly recognised in its presentation he supreme function of the dramatist, but the secret of exhibiting he development of character by action he was not able, unless exceptionally to compass, and it was thus that he came to fall short of the highest dramatic excellence. Reserving, for the moment, a reference to the lyrics in Dryden s dramas, we must not take leave of these without a word as to his prologues and epilogues. There was no species of composition in which he more conspicuously excelled, or in which those who came after him more decidedly falled to reach his eminence but many dreumstances help to account for the signal success with which, in the present instance, he exerted his innate power of 'improving every literary opportunity that came in his way. The age which preceded Drydens was, above everything, a pumphleteer ing age and his own generation had retained at least a full freedom of unlicensed allusion-whether political or other. When we further remember that the mode of the day was a frankness of tongue in which dukes and duchesses did their atmost to imitate linkmen and orangewomen, it is not difficult to understand why the prologue and epilogue, instead of adhering to their humbler task of commending to attention and favour a particular play. became accepted relicies of political praise and blame, intermixed with current social satire of all sorts. In the relatively small area of restoration London, of which the court was the acknowledged centre, these sallies were always transporent and always welcome. The licence which the prologues, and, still more, the epilogues, allowed themselves was, consequently wide, and was duly reprehended by consors of the stage like Jeremy Collier Their delivery was generally entrusted to stage favourites, who were assured of a hearing and 'might say what they liked. Very frequently, as in the case of many of Dryden a these addresses were composed by leading authors for less known writers, or again, by personages who wished to remain free from direct responsibility. Their importance may, perhaps, have been exaggerated but, printed as broadsides, they must often have added to the attractions of a nerformance, and have been carried home as an enduring remembrance. Thus, the composition of them was assidnously cultivated, and remunerated by a handsome fee1

s we may call The Spanish Fryar) and one tragedy (AR for

R L VIII. CO. I.

34

The examples of this kind of composition remaining from Dryden a hand amount to nearly one hundred. They attest his inventive powers in the way of conception and arrangementincluding the variety of prologues made to be dialogues, burlesqued in The Reheared in the prodislogue between Thunder and Lightning they also attest his power both of more playful sarcasm (as in his multiform jests against the critics) and of condensed invective or admonition. Among them may be included three prologues spoken on definite political occasions, unconnected with the production of particular stage-plays one of these, the Prologue to the Duchess [of York] on her return from Scotland (1683) is a charming example of reckless flattery

We now resume our general summary of Dryden's life and literary work from the time of the beginning of his isbours as a dramatist, which it seemed most convenient to survey con tingously. His simultaneous appointments in 1668 as poet laureate (in succession to D'Avenant) and as historiographer royal (for which latter post his qualifications, doubtless, were found in Assas Mirabilis) imposed no duties hereafter to be done, nor were any performed by him in either of his official capacities for his translation of Malmbourg's History of the League (1684) at the request of Charles II, can hardly be regarded as a service to English historiography Thus, he went on writing for and about the stage, adding to his modest income by dedications, prologues, introductory easilys and prefaces. But, though criticism often meant controversy and a constantly growing reputation drew the eyes of Londoners and strangers on the famous man of letters, as be get in his accustomed scat in Will a coffee-house, at the corner of Russell street and How street, Covent Garden, everything seems to show that, by disposition, and in his ways of life, be was a quiet and retiring man, plain in his habiliments, and averse from the brolls which disgraced the republic of letters. Those in which, in his earlier days, he was implicated do not seem to have been of his own seeking, but the existing methods of literary and, more especially, theatrical, competition, and the consequent necessity of securing the patronage of leaders of society and fashion, made it all but impossible to be in the town and not of it. Noblemen of Rochester's stamp, and others of a more sober sort, took pride in displaying their more or less arbitrary patronage of men of letters. This condition of things may almost be said to have culminated in the 'Rose-aller ambuscade, one of the most shameless episodes in English literary history On the suspicion of his having assisted John Sheffleld, earl of Mulgrave (afterwards duke of Buckingham shire) in a passage in his Essay on Sature reflecting on Rochester a want of wit, Dryden was brutally assaulted by hirelium of that nairon of letters, who had recently transferred his favours, such as they were, to other writers (1679)1

¹ The urnal fee was five guiness, till Dryslen charged Southerns ten for a prologue and epilogue to The Loyal Brother or The Loyal Prince (see South Relatebory's edition, vol. c. p. 2451. Both are very hard on the Whiere, and Devices scarcely ever wrote anything courses

¹ Cital in A Study of the Prologue and Fynbyne in English Literature from Shekapeers to Dryden, by O S. R. (1895), to which the reader may be referred for a eareful treatment of an interestor rebiect.

It would not serve any purpose to dwell upon the general mori gention of Dryden, who, in this as in other respects, was burried down the times in which he lived, to the leaders of politics and fashlon, to the king's milsters, favouritor and mistresses, or upon the fasteries which, in dedications and elsewhere, he heaped upon the king himself, and upon his brother the duke. The attempts, however which have been made to show that his pen was renal—in any sense beyond that of his laving been paid for his compil ments, or, at least, for a good many of them—many be said to have broken down and the fact that he may have received payment from the king for writing The Heidal does not prove that he was inspired by the expectation of personal profit when he first attacked the future medallist in Absolom and Achitonbek.

In undertaking the composition of this great satire, whether or not at the request of Charles II, Dryden had found his great literary opportunity, and, of this, be tool advantage in a spirit far removed from that of either the hired borous or the spiteful hampooners of his ago. For this opportunity he had been uncon sciously preparing himself as a dramatist, and it was in the nature of things, and in accordance with the responsiveness of his genius to the calls made upon it by time and circumstance, that, in the season of a great political crists, he should have rapidly per ceived his chance of declairely influencing public opinion by an exposure of the sims and methods of the party of revolution. This he proposed to accomplish, not by a poetle summary of the rights of the case, or by a sermon in verse on the size of factionspear, corruption and treason, but by holding up to the times and their troubles, with no marksterial air or dictatorial gesture, a mirror in which, under a happily contrived disculse, the true friends and the real foca of their king and country should be recognized. This was the 'Varronian form of satire afterwards commended by him, with a well warranted self-conecionspess, as the species, mixing serious intent with pleasant manner to which among the ancients, several of Lucian's Dialogues and, among the moderns, the Encommon Mortae of Erasmus belong. Of the same kind is "Mother Hubberd's Tale" in Spenser and (if it be not too rain to mention surthing of my own) the poems of "Absolom" and "MacFleckpool"

³ There is small comfort in a parallel; but, in moting the light threws by this could spon the relations between society and latters in Dryden's age, it may be abled that the date of a not dissimilar braind insult to Telepine by a member of the beaut of Behau was 1723.

The political operation at hanc, in the troubled times of which the names whig and tory still survive as speaking momentoes, his exclusion in favour of some other claimant-perhaps the king's son Monmouth, whom many believed legitimate (the Absolum of the poem). For many months Shaftesbury who after serving and abandoning a succession of governments, had passed into opposition, had seemed to direct the storm. Two parliaments had been called in turn, and twice the Exclusion bill had been relected by the lords. Then, as the while leader seemed to have thrown all hesitation to the winds and was either driving his party or being driven by it into extremities from which there was no return, a treasor of reaction ran through the land, the party round the king gathered confidence, and, evidence supposed sufficient to support the charge having been swent in Shaftesbury was committed to the Tower on a charge of high treason. It was at this time of tension, while a similar charge was being actually pressed to the gallows against a humbler agent of faction (the Protestant Johner' Stephen College), that Dryden's great effort to work upon public opinion was made. Part 1 of Absolom and Achitophel, which seems to have been taken in hand gulta early in 1081 was published on 17 hovember in that year Shaftesbury it is known, was then fearing for his life. A week later in spice of all efforts to the contrary, the bill was ignored by the Middlesex grand jury Great popular rejoicing followed, and a medal was struck in Shaftesbury's honour, representing the sun emerging from the clouds, with the legend Lactaster But, this momentary triumph notwithstanding, the game was all but up and, within a few mouths, Mommouth, in his turn, was under arrest, and Shaftesbury a fugitive in Holland.

^{6 &}amp; Director soncerning the Original and Program of Raine (Essays, ed. Ker val. vs. 9, 6%).

Without a mention of this well known sequence of events, the fact might, perhaps, be overlooked that part I of Absalom and Achitopher is complete in itself, being intended to help in producing a direct result at a given moment, and that it is in no sense to be regarded as a more instalment of a larger whole, or as an introduction to it. Part II was a mere afterthought, and, being only to a relatively small extent by Dryden, should, in the first instance,

Absalom and Achitophel vells its political satire under the transparent disgulae of one of the most familiar episodes of Old Testament history, which the existing crisis in English affairs resembled sufficiently to make the allegory apposite and its inter retation casy The attention of the English public, and, more specially that of the citizens of London, with whom the decision f the immediate political issue lay was sure to be arrested by a ries of characters whose names and distinctive features were corrowed from the Old Testament and the analogy between Charles II s and David s early exile and final triumphant cetablish ment on the throne was a commonplace of restoration poetry Indeed, the actual notion of an adaptation of the story of Achitophel's wiles as the Picture of a wicked Politician was not new to English controversial literature in 1680 a tract entitled Absoloms Compiracy had dealt with the supposed intentions of Monmonth and a sattre published in 1081 only a few months before Dryden s poem, had applied the name Achitophel, with some other opprobrious names, to Shaftesbury For the rest, Dryden, with the granden habitual to him, was careless about fitting the secondary figures of his sattre exactly with their Scriptural albases, or boring the reader by a scrupulous fidelity or even consistency, of detail.

Abadom and Achstophed remains the greatest political antire in our literature, partly because it is frankly political, and not infended, like Hadibras, by means of a mass of accumulated detail, to convey a general improvation of the vices and follies, defects and extraragances, of a particular section or particular sections of the nation. With Dryden, overy hit is calculated, and every stroke goes home in each character brought on the scene, those features goes nome in communications in organization and seeing mass contents only are selected for exposure or praise which are of direct 38 only are science for the purpose in hand. It is not a satirical narrative complete in itself which is attempted the real desortement of the plece falls not within, but outside, its compass. In other words, the process must not within, our consume, its compass. In other words, the poem was to lead up, as to an unavoidable sequitor to the trial and conviction of its hero. The satisfat, after the fashion of a great parliamentary orator has his mbject and his treatment of it well in hand through all the force of the invective and the ferrom of the praise, there runs a consciousness of the possibility that the or the preuse, there rules a consciousness of the Passional State of Passional State of Control Political situation may change. This causes a constant self-control policical sicustions may change a navays alive to his impiration and wariness in the author who is always alive to his impiration and wanted in the cue. Instead of pouring forth a stream of Aristophanic vituperation or boyish fun in the rein of Canning be so nicely suspensions of the more important of his to so much surpress are researched to the union majoreant to the characters to the immediate issue that the treatment, both of the tempter Achitophel and of the tempted Absolum, admitted of tempter actitionnel and of the tempted Australia, admitted of manipulation when, before the appearance of the poem in a second edition' the condition of affairs had changed.

It was not, of course, when first published, called part 1 at all. E.g. in the allegorical was of the manner Habren and Jerdan.

Chapter and verse could, without difficulty be found for every ttem in Joinson a well known panegoric of Absolom and Achitophel in his Life of Dryden. The incomparable brilliancy of its diction and versification are merits which, to be acknowledged, need only to be mentioned Still, its supreme excellence lies in its deoriginations of character which, no doubt, owed something to his dramatic practice, and more to the development which this kind of ornmater process, and more to the occupancy when the same of a whole generation of English writing land experienced during a whole generation of English prose Hierature, reaching its full height in Charesdon. Drydens exquisite etchings cannot be compared with the finest of the full-length portraits from the hand of the great historical writer but, thanks, no doubt in part, to the Damascene brightness and keeness into which the poet had tempered his literary instrument, acciness min which are 1000 min competed in increasy man money and thanks, also, to the imaginative insight which, in him, the literary follower of the Stowarts, was substituted for the unequalled experinoneer of their chosen adviser Clarendon, the characters of the poem lire in the memory with unequalled tenacity How unmietakably is the preeminence of Achitophel among the opponents of the royal government signallised by his being commissioned, like his prototype when charged with the temptation and corruption of mankind, to master the shaken virtue of Abealom! Yet, when the entire proceeds from the leader to the followers, what composite body of malcontents was ever analyzed, even by a minister driven to bay, with surer discornment and more perfect insight? The honest whice, the utili tarian radicals, the speculators who use party for their private ends, the demagogues and mob-orators who are the natural product of faction—all are there but so too, are the republicans on principle, headed by survivors of the fanatics who believed in their own theograpy Of course, the numerical strength of the party is made up by the unthinking crowd that takes up a cry-in this case, the TY'No Popery Of the chiefs of the faction, for the most part, a few incisive lines, or even a damning epithet, suffice to dispose but there are exceptions, suggested by public or by private con siderations. In the latter class, Dryden's own statement obliges us to include Zimri (Buckingham)—a character which he declares to be worth the whole poom' What he says of his intentions in devision this masterpiece of wit, and of his success in carrying them into execution. Illustrates at once the discretion with which he applied his satirical powers and the limitation which his nature. as well as his indement, imposed upon their use. Moral indignation was not part of Dryden a mitirical stock. Even the hideously true likeness of Titus Onics (Corah) preserves the accent of saressm which had saited the malicious sketch of Shimel, the inhospitable sheriff of the city. It is as if the noet a blame could never come with so full a tone as the praise which in the latter part of the noem. is emecfully distributed among the chief supporters of the crown. The poem ends with a speech from king David, only in part reproducing the speech of Charles II to the Oxford parliament (March 1681), of which the king is said to have suggested the insertion. Though, as has been seen, the Middlesox grand jury was proof

¹ The story asserting to which the tribute to Shaftesbury's month as a judge was invested because he had presented one of Drylers some to the Charactersons was insertent secures to man presented one of trypers goes to see that a fabrication on beautiful. Bee Makens u.s. 79, 14.—8, election so mercen be it was majoric from masters and fire event. We recommise who, perceiving to Johnson, was the first Walg.

Though, as has been seen, the Middlesox grand jury was proof against Dryden's satire, which provoked a number of replies not calling for notice here, the reaction with which he had identified himself was not long in setting in—so much so that, in March 1682, the dake of York was not afraid to show himself in England it was about this time that Dryden, it is said at the king's suggestion, published The Metal, or A Satire against Section. Into this poem, which, likewise, called forth a variety of replies attesting its effectiveness, the didactic element enters more largely 1.30 a December searches the Original and Program of Sates (s. p. 23).

² Bestingham may not have wholly disliked the lines, though he returned on themselved and the advantily fit Wood is right in northing to their Precised Reference etc., by a Person of Quality 1891). Popula versus on Bestingham can hardly be said to have bettered Dryker's just the daded putties in really solere.

than it had done in the case of its more famous predecessor but the principal point of attack is again selected with great judgment. 40 Shaftesbury's hypocrtay is the quality for which the hero of the orancesory a myressy as one quanty an named on one of parlian citizens is more especially censured while his worshippers are derided, not because they are few but because they are many The inimitable apostrophe to the mobile metrically as well as in other respects, is one of the most magnificent mockeries to be found in verse

Almighty crowd! thou shortment all dispute; Power is thy sample, wit thy attributal

Thou leap it o'er all eternal truths in thy Pindario way!

Among the whig writers who came forward to reply to The Medal was Thomas Shadwell, whose contributions to the dramate literature of the age are noticed elsewhere! Dryden and the True Illue Poot had been on friendly terms, and the former had written a prologue for Shedwell's comedy A True Widow so recently as 1679. But, in The Hedal of John Bayes, the source, as has been seen, of not a few longilved scurrilities against Dryden, and (if this was by the same hand) in The Tory Posts, Sindwell contrived to offend his political adversary beyond bearing. Johnson and others have, however blundered in suppooling the while writers appointment to the poet languageship, which was not made till 1600, to be alloded to in Hao Fleckroo or A Satire on the True Blue Protestant Poet, T S, which was politated in October 1683. Unlike Absolom and Achilophel and its offshoot The Medal, Mac Flechage is a purely personal satire in meliro and design. Richard Flecknoo was an Iriahman, formerly in catbolic orders, who (if a note to The Descind is to be trusted) indication of the mechanic part of pricethood to derote himself to literature. It is difficult to understand why (except for the fact that be had been a priest) Dryden abould have determined to make this harmless, and occasionally agreeable, writer of verse a type of literary imbedility. Flocknoo must be supposed to have died not long before Dryden wrote his satire, in which the o year poor chap. vi. 1 from the Original and Progress of Entre (u.e. p. 27) when here, a successful entertainty are trypmen and average of participation of the participation from Spanner to Firether appears as an optimization from the warma and management of the colors as a section of appears as an equivalent as an equivalent of the section of all portry. Some serious early keen by Marrell equities Fleshes. top to the bottom of all portry mones surrost suny time by starrast settlines a present of the portry mones surrost suny time by starrast settlines as Frajúla Préset at Riese durentle him as proving his verses on a Lodgrag, these on Erytis Prior of hims describe aim as profiles on versus in a longitude. Here of Andrew state cases high (Orean's Paller Worklise others of The Computer Earler Spaller Worklise others of The Computer Earler Spaller Worklise others of The Computer Earler Spaller Spalle state when high (Oreset's Faller Worthise oblives of The Complete Works of Andrew Marsett, rol. 1, 19-27 b). They first appeared in 16-1, and may possibly have surgestly Dynder's choice. Though he represent the posses with corrections in 1684, and the part of the Complete Complete

'agod prince is represented as abdiesting his rule over 'the realms of Nonsonse in favour of Shadwell. This humorous fancy forms the slight action of the piece, which terminates with a mock catastrophe suggested by one of Shadwell's own comedies. Thus, with his usual insight, Dryden does not make any attempt to lengthen out what is in Itself one of the most successful examples of the species—the mock herolo—which it introduced into English literature. Pope, as is well known derived the idea of his Desciad from Mac Flecknoe but, while the later poem assumed the proportions of an elaborate satire against a whole tribe of dunces as well as against one egregious dance, Dryden a is a jest deprut, though one brilliant enough to constitute an unanswerable retort upon unwarrantable provection. Slight as it is, Mac Flecknoe holds a place of its own among Dryden a masterpieces in English estirical poetry

This cycle of Dryden a writings is completed by his share in the Second Part of Absolom and Achtophel, published in November 1689, a few weeks after Mac Plecknos, and in the same month as Religio Laire. Dryden could therefore hardly have had time for ex tensive collaboration with Nahum Tate, a palmtaking and talented writer who, with enduring success, adapted King Lear and took part in a version of the Paulses with Nicholas Brady', and who, in his turn, was poet hureate (from 1692 to 1715). Tate, who had the gift of being able to accommodate himself to diverse styles, not un skilfully copied Dryden's-here and there taking over lines bodily from part 1, but it is clear that, apart from the characters of Does and Og (Settle and Shadwell) and the powerful lines preceding them, which include the denunciation of Judas (Robert Ferguson the Plotter), the masterhand added not a few touches from the opening couplet cowards. Elkanah Settle, whose reputation was creator in his own day than it has been with posterity had invited the lach by a long roply to Absolom and Achitophel entitled Absalom Senior, or Achitophel Transpros d. in which others are said to have assisted him? The characters of the two lampooners remain the non plus ultra of imughty mtirical contempt. Instead of the wary assallant of political and social leaders like Achitophel and Zimri, we are now confronted by the writer of genius spurning

 $^{^3}$ The secondal reference in part u, v 403 to Secondold and Hapkins's various is by Deyden.

Of eatr p. 26. It is this that occurs the surfaces charge, which, however Deyden declared thice, that, as one time, he would have been this own leath of thing call'd priori.

A second reply attributed to fictile count not to have been his. See Malous, u.e.

4th rathless scorn, the brotherhood in letters of a Doeg or an Og nun runness worn, use oromernood in seriers of a Doeg or an O as is near ann airmigeach in um sciurat access now up in arms.

Religio Lerici, which, for reasons easily guessed, was not neege Lence, which for remains carning guessed, was not reprinted by Dryden in his lifetime after the third edition (1683), reprinted by Arguen in its meaning after the third continu (1003), is classed (by Scott) among his political and historical poems but is primary interest is personal, as must have been his primary is primary interest is personni, as muss have been his primary motive in composing it. He wished to know where, in the matter motive in composing it. He wished to snow where, in the matter of religion, he stood. Now for Dryden, there was but one way of of religion, no good. Now for Driven, there was not one way or conflicting any position which he held or any line of conduct on romining any position which he had determined. This was to place it before himself with which he had determined. This was to hand is before himself with the approximation may be allowed, his thoughts at once fell into lucid order ready for argumentative battle. Though Johnson a wish may in some degree, memaure nature. Accought someone a wan may in some ungreate be father to the thought, when he declares Religio Lerici to be no namer to the throught, when he cocarres mention Lette to be a simple the only poem by Dryden which may be regarded as a voluntary effection, Saintabury has rightly industed on the spon. voluntary emission, commutary has rightly massed on the sport taneous character of the poem. This sportaneity is, indeed, all taneous enameter of the poem. Ima spontanety is, indeed, at but essential to the conception of the work nor was there any aluie motive or reason for simulating it.

The title, of course, was anything but original. Lord Herbert possible motire or reason for simulating it. The title, of course, was anything out original. Lord Horders of Cherbury a treatise De Religious Leich had been published in of Coeroury's treatists of Religio Medici ten years inter With low, or spound proving accipte accidence on pears meer struct for shough not with Browne, the emphasis rests on the second Dryggen, though not with Browne, the emphasis rests on the second noun of the title. Amidst the disputations and controversies of noun or the title. Amens the disputations and controverses of learned theologiams, a plain word seems not uncalled for from one seemed theologiam, a plain work seems not discalled for front one who can contribute nothing our commonsense and goods it, un-alloyed by self-opinionatedness. Thus, the layman a religion is anoyed of self-opiniomicuness. Linus, the layman a religion is expounded with the regulatio brevity and with notable directness. expounded with the requisite everity and with notation directness and force, lighted up by a few of the satirfical fleahes which had and torce, uguited up of a tew of the saturical masnes which had become second nature to the writer but not by any outburst of occome second matere to the writer out not of any outcome or monthly of the controllable ferrour. He takes his stand on rerelation, but is uncontrollance terrour the takes his stand on revenuon, out is exerful to summarise the natural proofs of the truth of Christianity caretul to summaruo me maturas proous of the truth of currentnity. The old objection to superustural religion, that it has not been the old collection to supernatural rengion, that is has not occur revealed to all men, be is content to answer by a plous hope, reressed to an men, no is content to answer of a Proces nope, expressed in words both forcible and beautiful. He puts askide expressed in words both forcine and beautiful. He puts associated the difficulty of the damnatory clauses of the Athanasian creed by the unicenty of the nametery clauses of the Augustian creet by conjecturing a very human explanation of their origin, and, after confectuable a test annual explanation of the contention that the authority of the Bible is weekened by mistakes of transcribers

⁷ Yather (Richard) Sierre (erther of Hirster critical de Flora Tectament (1678) 1 years (Consers) names (sense of mirrors croups of a sens 2 minors (1816) and other worls, for the heads of whose young English translator, Heary Dickinson, and other wateris are the security been composed.

and commentators, approaches the crucial question what authority then, is to decide! An infallible authority it must be, and the only church which makes such a claim fails to satisfy the tests of infallibility or emulscience. Better, therefore, accept authority where it is ancient, ouiversal and unsuspected, and leave saide matters which cannot be thus satisfy.

For points obscure are of small use to learn, But common quiet is the world's concern.

Riduyo Loric, it is needless to demonstrate at length, represents merely a halfway house on the road which Dryden was following. Reverence for authority was an instinct implanted in his nature his observation of the conflicts of public life had diagnated him with the contrary principle of resistance, and, at the same time, had impressed upon him the necessity of walving minor difficulties for the sake of the things that really mattered. If the layman simple creed should fall, in the long run, to satisfy the layman himself, it could easily be relinquished for as the designedly pedestrian conclusion of the peem avers, it was meant merely for what it was—a plain personal utterance.

And, thus, the reader of Dryden's writings in their sequence is not startled on reaching the passage in his biography which has given rise to much anery comment and anxious apology, without, in truth, calling for anything of either In February 1685, Charles II died. Dryden's literary services had materially contributed to carry safely through some of the most dangerous stages of the conflict the cause of the legitimate succession, on which Charles had gone near to staking the stability of his throne. The poets efforts against the party which he had again and again denounced as revolutionary had extranged from him old literary amodatessome of them more pliable than himself-and had left him, more than over a reserved and, probably at least, a lonely man. But, whatever the king's personal interest in Dryden's literary activity the royal bounty flowed but very intermittently, and neither the three hundred a year due to the noet laurente nor an additional pension of one bandred (granted some time before 16"0) was paid with any approach to regularity Not until 1684 after he had addressed a letter of complaint' to Rochester (Laurence Hyde) at the treasury was a portion of the arrears paid, while he scription.

¹ This is the letter containing the scholaried passace: The emough for one are to have regarded Mr Cowley and starred Mr Entire. In The Illeed and the Pasther part m. et. 217 E. the abandonment of Builer is absordly laid at the door of the thorsh of England.

46 parages of his later writings on the other hand, it cannot be

averred that, in these writings, as a whole, there is any indication, as there is certainly no pretence, of a change which purifies what is intentionally impure, or refines what is intentionally gross1 The new king was not in a position to disdain the aid of any fresh ally and the services of Dryden's pen were speedily claimed by the side which he had joined. But the desired version of the Histoire de l'Hérèsie (1374 to 1569) by Antoine Varilles, never mw the light-hardly as Burnet contended, because of his criticisms of the French historian and publicist? Dryden's assist ance was also engaged in defence of a poper written by Anne Hyde, duchess of York, giving reasons for her conversion to the church of Rome, which James II had published with two statements found among his deceased royal brother's papers, acknow ledging the authority of that church. Stillingfleet had commented on the publication as a whole, and now replied in a Fundication on which, in his turn, Dryden, denounced by Stillingfeet as a 'grim logician, commented in an apologic of an altogether novel de-

The Hind and the Panther was published in 1687 and is mid to have been written at Rushton in Northamptombire, a sylvan neighbourhood. If Dryden a conversion does not present any psychological difficulties, it also seems natural that he should have speedily proceeded to explain to the world a position not new to it, but strange and, therefore, in a sense, new to himself. That The Hind and the Panther cannot be harmonised with Relinto Laics is, of course, part of the situation, although the two poems are not inconsistent with each other as stages of a mental evolution. To suggest that the later work was written to ensure the favour of James II (from whom it does not appear what Dryden had to expect beyond punctuality), is to ignore a very plain historical consideration. In April 1687-a fortnight before the publication of the poem-James II put forth the declaration for liberty of conscience which extended to nonconformists in general, and was, in fact, the catholic kings bid for the support of the protestant discenters in his struggle with the establishment. On the other hand, the convert Dryden's personal confession of faith was, at the same time, an errencon to the church of England from the catholic side, and a summons to her to Join hands with the church of Rome against the protestant nonconformists. Insumuch as a similar royal declaration had been issued in Scotland two months cariler and the dispensing power had received a solemn judicial affirmation in the previous year, Dryden could not have been taken by surprise by the kings recent action. He could, therefore, hardly have put forth a libal of policy less likely to commend itself to the king and those who advised him in accordance with his wishes, or have given a more palpable proof either of obtaseness—a quality not characteristic of him—or of candour

I Sea, on this beal, Beljame, A., Le Public et les Rommes de Lettres on Angleiere an 19me ribele (Parm, 15-0), p. 219.

^{*} As to Vanillas's work, see the shapter on Eleterical Writers in val. In [900] (Rernet).

The poem is far the longest of Dryden's original productions in verse but it is carried on with unmistakable figure to its somewhat shrupt close, and, in its concluding, as well as in its opening, part, displays the roverse of a falling off in power of either invention or expression. Oriticism has chiefly directed itself against the plan of the work, which Johnson, for instance, terms injudicious and incommoditous, rather than to the conduct of the arguments, which cannot be described as inadequate or mercen.

The Hind and the Pastker (as would be obvious, even were it not made additionally clear by the first lines of part III) does not pretend to be more than a fable, a product of an artificial stage of poetry which confines its attention to human nature and introduces animals merely in a parabolical way so animals would have spoken or acted, had they been men. All references, how ever interesting, to the beast-epos, an independent literary cycle, into which satirical meanings and types were not introduced till a comparatively late date, are, therefore, more or less out of place in this connection. Bill less can there be any question here of the transfer of a whole world of human sentiment and character into the outward conditions of animal life—as in Edmond Rostands Character—not for purposes of analogy but in order to rend a precilical significance into the whole system of animated nature.

J. Here a theological argument may be meried on in terms without the shill and efectivement in the instant in The Hered and the Pranther in exceptibled by A Poem so the Bost Prantee and the Rade of Patch, printed as an approxil to Henry Turbervit's Mermed of Construction charry Demonstrating the Treats of the Catholic Riligion, with Mermed of Construction charry Demonstrating that Treats of the Catholic Riligion, with terrorial Enterior and of the Rade of Patch (18). The exceptions as a said to be consisted by 3 D_c, the Authoric Patchol. In these not follow that the posmit is by 3.D. 1 and 1 cannot, in any sear think that the latter through it is shirtly divested against Billiangitest, shower signs of Drydon absolutest. The composition is extraordinately assumed to the Authority of Drydon and Drydon and Patcholic analysis of the shirtly about the probability is the other way for the analysis of like of one to Drydon in this Maring Bablion.

The Hind and the Panther is allegorical only in its miss-on-some and distribution of characters as a fable, its fault is that it falls short of the moderate amount of Imaginary verisimilitude required by this literary species. On the face of it, therefore, Prior and Charles Montague, the authors of The Hind and the Panther Transvers d to the Story of the Country Mouse and the City House (1007) were justified in ridicaling in the preface to their squib the incongruity of animals indulging in theological controversy and Dillical criticism, as was Johnson in repeating the same cavil in different words But Dryden had often, in regard both to i drama and to other branches of literature, defended the cause English freedom and, in his free use of the machinery of ti fable for antirical and didactic purposes, he was following the examples of Chancer and Spensor Still, poetry and theologica controversy are illimatched associates, and Dryden was at little pains to mitigate the harabness of the union, dropping the fabulom vestmont which he had cust round his disputants so soon as he chose, in order to resume it at his convenience.

Of the two justly celebrated fables proper included in part III of this poem, the carifer—that of the swallows—attests the independence of Dryden a attlinde towards the court, where the censure of father Petre (the Martin), though supposed to be delivered by an adversary cannot have been welcome. In the story of the Figures and the Barrard's love, the character of Burnet (the Boxard), ranks with the most powerful of the poets satirical efforts. Unlike Stillingfleet, who is dealt with carrier in the same part of the poem, Burnet, though he is called invulnerable in his impudence, lay broadly open to attack, and, according to his wont had voluntarily descended into the arena with his Recurous egoing Repealing the Tests

The Hind and the Panther for reasons which have been made apparent, could not bring the poet into favour with any party; and critics like Martin Clifford and Tom Brown could fall upon him as they pleased. When, in contravention of the hopes uttered

Direct, who were expressly to make see treesty service sweets and water from manifolding the proposal, in 1607 of a lat on Phylhesis. Tourising the pres matter of dramatic people, in 1857 of a 185 on physheum. 7 mentang un gran, manag sa Grandett peny se a moment sa grandetty and a property of all facts (Universe or has tray I are all the 1522 vol. 6, p. 435). Bernet does extinct product or style less it means that even without the proof. Marinet

Much I the rilicale is this perfector, which revived the methods of The Exhausti on a mark hos. Propping scenars, is tryed, and some of it is as released. distances we a found non. I properties extended, it in the plant, and some or it is no version.

The property list in property in the plant page very sufficient of these of the contract of the plant page. has very man or more very symmetric Density for the format who some originally in here had Directly for large formation Daylone.

in Britannia Redictor, the change of régime enmed, and William and Mary held away in her fathers stead, Drydens places and pendons were taken from him, and Shadwell were the laurel. It seems to have been about this time that Dryden became indebted to Dorset for substantial support, but he manifestly continued to add to his income by literary labours. That the vitality and freshpear of his powers still remained undiminished is shown by the variety of his productions in these years. Not long before the end of James Il's reign, be had written the playful Letter to Sir George Etherene, which alone among his complimentary episties and ad dresses (extending over many years of his life) is in Hudibrastic metre. In 1500 as has been seen, he successfully resumed work for the stare. There does not seem to have been any indisposition on the part of the new court to show goodwill to him as a play wright, but, in commanding The Spanish Fryar to be performed on one of her first appearances in public, queen Mary chose more fortunately for him than for herself. Meanwhile, the connection between the publisher Jacob Tonson and Dryden was productive of much literary work, though, when there was a pecuniary pressure unon Dryden, the relations between them frequently tried his parlence and at times, roused him to wrath? Besides the trans lations from classical poets already mentioned as included in the carliest volumes of the Muscellany Dryden, with the amistance of his two elder sons, brought out, in 1693, a complete translation of Juvenal and Persius, prefaced by one of the most delightful of his camps. In its earlier portions, A Discourse concerning the Original and Progress of Satire may after the manner of such profesomena have been put together so as to suit the amount of information to the appetite of the reader but the comparison between the three Roman satirists contains some admirable criticism, and the easy and graceful style is enjoyable from begioning to end. The emay profixed to Dryden a translation (1005) of Du Fresnoy's Parallel of Poetry and Painting (the French proze version printed by the author with his original Latin poem De Arte Graphica) is, perhaps, more obviously written to order It contains an elaboration of the theory that the true imitation of nature consists of the pursuit of the ideal in art-a view on which Dryden had insisted in his early disquisitions on dramatic poetry? but which, though it might have commended itself to Goethe, has until recently been regarded as out of date.

³ Witness the triplet under Justi's periods, perhaps the unitest of all Dryden's word releases.

In the third and fourth Miscellanes (1693 and 1694) appeared Dividen a version of book I, and of cortain other portions, of the Medamorphoses, with the parting of Hector and Andromache out of accumorphouses, while the parting of factor and andromache out of the Riad as well as a translation of the third Georgic! In 1694, the idea of a translation of the whole of Vergil scena to have and the completed work was brought out by subscription in 160 The enterprise and its success made out by anticorphism in 100. The enterprise and its success mesus much talk in the world of letters, and from still remote Hanover. much that it the world on the prize of £1000—Pope was told that it Letonic commented on the prize of Liver-rope was took time in was £1300—which had fallen to the fortunate. Mr Dryden's lot. has resonment men remon to the interests anduly was b nut mongo nervices, we never forming an intercess annual was a forgettal of them, he did himself honour by steadily refusing t dedicate his magnance oper to the king to whom he had decline occurs one manyarms open to too king to woom no had decume to swear allegance. The actual dedication of the Agrees to to swear anegrance— the actual deducation of the Acades to Normanity (Malgrare) is one of Dryden's longest, but not one of his most interesting, efforts of the sort

The longified favour shown by the English reading public to and congress server shows by the region resume process to maintains from the classics was largely due to the fact that the transmittons from the contact was largely une to the back that the intellectual education of boys belonging to the bigher classes was miconectors exactive or only octonizing to the inguer curron was ann market carried on of exactantia ment in transaction more one classics into English prose or varse Dryden himself, it will be casses into rugum prose or rerse reguest musica, is was oc remembered, had been trained in this way at Westenheiter This reactice must have encouraged freedom of rendering as well as Assured must have carcouraged internation of tenuering as well as elegance of composition in translation and Dryden, possessed of esganto ta tampanium in transmum and facile in execution, was a genue suggestry open to suggestion and totals in executivity was or an unmanature mose certain to easer in one are time concentred. From the point of view of exact scholarship, nothing can be said in From the penns of a method which does not show any reference for the latour on a incurson which open not allow any reference for the cart, and very little for the style, of the original author. But Dayden a contemporaries were perfectly willing that the gradom regions concomparative was perfectly withing was the Biograms and of his poetle style should dominate the Vergil of the Georgies and the Verifi of the Acacad alike, as it had the Roman satiries and the breadth and boldness of some of the finest octors teen and the oversum and continue of same of the most of creditan parenges lent themselves readily to reproduction by the

I In the Mireckey of 1604 the Present the spirite F & Ondry Kenter to whom Trylen nest here have attracted by his account in writing the spirite and the spirite of the spirite and the spirit a pisture to whom keyben man have seen attracted by his encouse is setting too failbest! Sailtres of Twice entranchmenty number of notice. The Parisons in the dicinett feature of pute entrancianty number of action. The reference to the comment are in choefet.

The hard home present to the direct to the hing by his publisher who He had here framed as ded case the work to the hing by his publisher when the principle of pits deceased by prevailed for the purpose with cases one of the content of the critical angles of the critical angles. while your real patter in critical on the fitter organ.

It contains, keeping many valuable absorptions on metrical form; so it is to

It southest, herether seems valuable aderrations on metrical forms; and it is to prove the Dyydon species of larting long had by one the materials of an English of the Control of the Con

English poet, although others remained, whose majesty and depth of sentiment be could not infuse into his couplets.

The freedom which Dryden had assumed as a translator of the Roman poets he carried a step further in the reproductions of Chancer and of Chancer's frequent source, Boconccio, which were not published till two months (or rather less) before his death. They were accompanied by versions of the first book of the Iliad and of certain parts of the Metamorphoses, and some original poems and the whole rolume, with a preface dated 1699, has the curious title Fables, Ancient and Modern. Dryden carned the gratitude of all lovers of English literature, when, near the close of his brilliant career and after recurring to the classical exemplars of his worth he turned to our old English poet, Chancer He describes himself in the preface as having been moved by the thought that there was much in Chancer (it was certainly not the noblest or the raciest elements in his genius) in which he resembled Ovids But he also observes that, of the great English poets who had found no immediate successor in their insight into the poetic genius of our language, the entere Milton-Spensor-Chancer was closely linked, and that, in rolar back to Chaucer he went back to one whom he accounted the first great writer in English poetion! literature. For the sake of the spirit of this tribute, worthy alike of him who paid and of him who received it. Dryden may readily be forniven some of the blemishes (if they be justly deemed such) in the execution of his task. In a few instances (far fewer than are to be found in the earlier translations), effects are heightened which there was no reason for heightening, and turns of phrase are introduced incompatible not so much with the dignity as with the natural simplicity of thought (naïrets) characteristic of all that Chancer wrote. (Curiously enough, this criticism, if just, is not applicable to the tales from Boccaccio, who was anything but not/) It has been cleverly said that Dryden acrubbed up Chancera process which suits fine old plate, but not the total effect of a beautiful old house. The amplifications which Dryden openly i The stack upon Dryden of Laks Milhourus (1924) was, probably the result of placing as he had feared a resulter of hock of the Arneld, and to be now lost. His Arms to which he paid dear certain some other specimens of his translations near Veryal.

E sept al. Est tol. II, p. 217; are, bewerer pp. 254 ft.

b Of this Depler was perbetly aware; nor sould the same applies his own method to better rated than it is by him (prefers to Felice in Energy, off. Ene well no. p. $0.5) to behalf at it acted of Liescotter who which Clauser as served as Mr Overley depth than 1. See As I have been been a fixed to the thing the conference of the him. (So, in his term, Mr Tope expetited. Who store reads Gowley though conferencing to own a tractic for the binary, or the heart?)

permitted himself it would be begging the question to condemn as Dryden pennitted minest is a one to degring me quotient to commin as and on the outer mand, drey are not necessarily to be regarded as additional beauties. The most extraordinary, as it is the most as auditional occurring. The most extraorumary, as it is the most extraorumary. extensive, audition is the use to the retision or the exquision. Character of a Good Paison, which seems to have been made Character of a 1000 Farron, which seems to mave teen made with the twofold purpose of proving him a nonjuror and of pointing out that he asse the totales of a tibe of britains and injects in another asset the totales of a tibe of britains and in brunning out that he was the foreign of a type of paragra and prices in the proce Prylace to the Fables is one of the most general. And one of the most meconstrained of all Dryden's proce oengrum and doe of the most disconstrained of all Diviens processing the doubted to whose example the fluctuation pacces nor can it so consisted upon many generations of readers, water this enay as exercised upon many generations of removes must, in part, be sacribed. The nature of a preface—he might must in part, be ascribed.

And unitare of a pressure—on indentification of half the prose writing that commends nave said, and massive or man one prose writing that comments itself to that large proportion of the public that are not students, need to trust carge proportion or the pursue trust are the attourned and at times to some who are— is rambling power wholly out of and, at times, to scane was are— is ransoning nover was us the way nor in it. This I have learnt from the practice of homest the way nor in it. Ann i may elearny from the practice of normal Montaigne, whose influence, indeed, is progressively perceptible Montagne, whose innuence, musees, is progressively perceptuse in Dryden's later proce writings, though it was nowhere emphashed in pryden s sater prose writings, though it was nowhere emphasized by too close an imitation.* For in truth there are features in by two cross an immunion. For in trata there are iculares in Montaigness-his qualitiess, for example, and his playfulness-Atomaticne—ans quantities, the example, and this pusylumens—which are foreign alike to Dryden's directness of manner and to when are integra since to despite as he does in different parts on reserved unique must be securify as we use an unusure pure of this Prylace to the accusation of loose writing brought against or the revoce to the accumulation of room attitude actinguish against him by Blackmore, and Collier he cannot be said to ploud with him by Discarnore- and Councer to eatinot or some to present with much success, unless it be in midgation of the offence charged much access, unless to on unitgation or too onence courses aspirat him but he makes amends, not only by the modesty of against nim out no makes amenus, not only of the monesty or his defence, but, also, by the practice into which he puts his regrets. his detence, out, also, or two practice into winch no plus his regreta-The selection of Fables from Chancer and still more so, from And selection of Fabres from Coancer and, still more so, from Boccaccio, would have been of a different kind had Dryden desired Boccaccio, would have been of a different kind mad Dryden desired more to please than to instruct—in other words, had the last more to picture than so institute the voter worth, and the been designed, like some of its earlier from an out tree upon using near tike some of its earned produce, to tickle relates pleased only by over-seasoned cates.

Nunce, to usus passes passes only up over-reasoned cause.

The last period of Dryslen's literary labours had also witnessed. the last period of Latymen's metaty second mad also withouse his final endeavours in trical verse—a species of poetry in which In deduction to his various I Accions I fire on this religion, part than 1712.

I then los aget the see is separated and for an this relief, past they from Dryden Fearral with fir Best, and Bildenium street to have arrow, and for Johnson (Longik) wat of the "Cily Englet or Englet Populate Virtual Populate Virtual Populate Con the Red Archer (1675), but rather from the redering, in the Englet on Population of the Longitude Con the Red Archer Con the to his flast of the (1621), but, taken from the referring, it his stays on Fris (1992).

Bythere for the level slay on his replace. The referre on Flast parties and continuous of the continuou on Dyshen for the level alloy in his systems. The Priorite on Distillment and College is the Principle and syllague to The Palyrim have been already noticed be achieved a more varied excellence than is always placed to his credit. The Song for St Cecilia Day designed for performance on that festival in 1687 by a recently founded musical society in Lendon, must have been written within a year after the beautiful ode To the Pious Memory of Mrs Anna Killiarsto already mentioned. Though, of course, devoid of any personal note, and so short as to he of the nature of a chorale rather than a contain, it solves its technical problem with notable skill, and the commanding power of the opening, upon which the close solomnly returns, is irresistible' Yet neither in this ode nor in its more famous successor Alexander's Feast or, The Power of Munque, written for the same festival in 1697, has Dryden escaped the danger inseparable from arbitrary variety of length of line and choice of rhythm. In a lyric on a solemn, and, to all intents, religious, theme-for much was drawn down from heaven by the instired saint-any approach to an ignoble or lilting movement jars upon ear and septiment and this is not wholly avoided in Alexander's Feast while, in the earlier ode, it occurs so to sneak, at the height of the argument. The example which both these odes attempted to set, of making sound an echo to the sense, was not one to be easily followed nor can they be themselves regarded as more than brilliant offorts to satisfy the illdefined conditions of an artificial form of lyrical years.

Dryden s lyrical endowment shows itself without estentation in the souge scattered through his plays. These products of an are dutinguished by a very strong and carefully cultivated sense of music often possess considerable charm, even when divorced from their natural complement, and seem, as it were, to demand to be sung! But, for the most part, they are wanton in thought, and, at times, gross in expression, and there were probably few of his productions for which their author would have been more ready to cry peccars.

His contributions to a directly opposite class of lyricshymnody-acre long supposed to have been extremely few and the question whether their number admits of being very much enlarged may be said to be still awaiting final judgment. The only hymn known to have been mublished by Dryden himself or in his lifetime is the well known paraphrase, as it calls itself, of the

² Granille (Lord Landowne) dentily initiated it in The British Euclioniers, set & sa. 1 (1706).

^{*} Of this sect are the sours in in Erening's Loce The Indian Emperer The Conjust of Granels (Part I), Chemene etc.

Veni Creator Spiritus and is a composition of simple, and even Dryden rem overmor opinion and is a composition of simple, and even severe, dignity. Together with this firm, Scott, on evidence server, augment assertion while the arrang occur, an evaluence which so far as it is known, cannot be held concluding admitted water, so tar as it is attract, camere we next concentre administration of Direction of Direction of Others—one, a translation of are our current we other errors two others—one, a transaction of Dears, the other (erropeously called by Scott St Johns Ere) a translation, in an immedial metre, of the hymn at eremong on a translation, in an emission metric, or one upon at ercineary on St Johns day which forms part of a sequence. It has now been discorred that these three pieces are included in a collection of cucorere unat more mire pieces are incionen in a conceins on 120 hymns printed in a book of Catholic devotions dated 1708 and internal evidence of metre and diction, coupled with the (late) and microma symmetre on metre and diction, conjuct with the classes, tradition that Dryden wrote a number of brains by way of tradition that Diffuent wrote a manner of friends of warrant absolving a penance imposed on him, has been held to warrant amorting a penance imposeo on min, was occur nem to marraus the conclusion that he was the author of all Salutabury can the conclusion that we was the animor of an community can hardly be mistaken in the view that if & Johns Ere be Dryden a manus on managers in one view man, is expensed are likewise, by his ouser symms with similar time to connected are, massive, or un-hand and a number of these hymns reprinted by Orby Shipley name and a number of three of the reprinted of their control of their subject of their subj certainty exuinit, to senser with many introduments or manner and diction, the freedom which Directed always exercised as a transoccup, the frection amon approach of morement, though relatively natur together with an acoustance or morement, though retailing souring. If they be Dryden 5 they offer a further proof of ittue soaring. It they on Diffuent, ther ouer a turner proof of the rematility of his lyric gifts but they do not suffice to give him a place among great English writers of hymns'

Naco aurous grees regular writers at ayumn.

Thus, in labours manifold and not without a disquietude of nums, in manager managers and mys without a disquience of spirit from which the decline of life is rarely exempt. Dividens apair from which the decime of the market exempt, bijuens and his literary career drow heaver and heaver to their close. cars and an meraly career ups mearer and neuter to mear cose.

Advancing years, and perhaps, other influences which it is difficult. Advancing yours, and periods, order matteries make a seminated of impossible to estimate, had rendered him less consistently obor miposauce to carmence may restricted man see community or or miposauce to allow his terrant of the femoral nature of the route and nature of the safe territe him as ther close, censors and autermines to access and to me man as their cooses, without returning libel for libel, or happoon for lampoon. If he without reasonal, suce for size, or suspects for suspects are suspects at occupied afford to contemn Milbourne, he turned upon Riackmore with equation in contemi amounted in antiton about interviewed with numer saysho currict area accompany as a green on ten ananom torce against wereing country in words which were not to be sporen in public till after he had himself passed aways. It is more pleading in producturance neural number practurates. At a must be trained product to remember that, in his declining years, he had not abundaned

The discounty that the three hydron actipued by food are method in The Prince of the Name I Textus. Uses may make between the city who then had said 1 The discrete that the three hypone surpose by food are method in The Prince of Color of the Rissell Figns May 730 made the Proceedingly by Orly Shiply and the color of the Rissell Figure 100 made. or Octo / the Blanck | Figs. Many was made their reading by Only Shipley and W. T. Berks. Trenty-three of the hymore on this person was reprinted by the former of the hymory was reprinted by the former of the figs. W. J. Earlia. Twenty-time of the hymone in this Primer was physical by the forces in James Science (Landon and New York, 1984). See, the a prefer of the whole ones. In June 2 Acres (Leading that Are Fore, 1984). Hen, for a review of the whole man, popular or Physical by the same with proprint direct the Datin Series 1984. Deplets on Hymosoles by the same wither (reprinted them the Public Service 1984), and, for several of the System, and critical Researcy appeals it. I as Service 1984; which of Section Property and France and Children, J. A. Dellamay of Hymosoles are Deplets.

his generous usage of encouraging the efforts of other writersespecially of younger men such as Southern's and Congreve's and frantille' Indeed, to each of the latter pair at different dates, obeying a generous impulse that could not help repeating itself, he bequeathed the laurels of which the world of letters knew him to the rightful wearer. He died, after a short filtness, on 1 May 1700, and, with due solemnity (though contemporary scandal sought to distort the facts) was, less than a fortulght afterwards, buried in Wostminster abby in the grave of Chaucer. Twenty years later by the tardy munificence of the dake of Buckingham shire (who did not live to see it erected) a plain monument with an equality simple inscription was raised over his remains.

Dryden's great literary achievements and his great literary qualities were not and could not be ignored by his own age, nor have the generations which succeeded been willing or able to belittle them. More than any of his contemporaries, he is entitled to be called the father of modern English proce while, as to English verse, the next generation might refine and, in some respects, improve upon its model, but this model could be no other than Timotheus himself. Congrere, to whom, in his latter years, Dryden confidently looked to continue his literary influence, said of him that he was equally excellent in verse and in proce, and it would be difficult to dispute the truth of the saying. His verse exhibits his chosen metrical instrument, the heroic couplet, in the fulness of its strength but, when he returned to blank verse, as a dramatist, he used it with notable effect, and it has been seen how varied was his command over lyric measures, from that of the Pindaric ode to those suited to the subtle madrigal or simple hymn. The metrical qualities of his verse will be discussed clacwhere, but its one pre-eminent quality the infinitely varied and always rightly judged distribution of movement in the line or counlet or stanza, can hardly be termed a metrical quality only. It depends largely on sureness of tact, rapidlty of insight and absolute self-confidence in the rejection of all means not leading directly to their end. Whether extreme passion or profound emotionwhether love, hatred, anger contempt, exultant joy or polgnant grief-calls for expression within the limits of the line or couplet. immediate room, precise place, exact emphasis is found for each

N. Benthern, on his Comply called. The Wirer Encode (1992).
 T. my door Friend Mr Congress on his Councy palled. The Double Dealer

⁵ To Mr Ormsellle on his carelless Trapaly called Heroich Love (1836).
See post shap, 12.

56

word or clanar. And the company is not low striking than white or customs. And the component is not for striking town abundance in this feast of words. There was in the days Corley, pleasy enough but the dishes were ill-sorted 1 Dryd know how to forego, instead of sweeping in. The poetle instrumer and now to mergo, manual or a merping in the fraction manual mending wholly in the arrive of the players band and, on each canadas sucus, su uso servico es uso justora sauto acas, on casa conside, it soema to give forth in perfection the music which that occasion demands

Divides a brose completes with an unprecedented case of flow and a forcide directors common to all be wrote, a lacidity of and a delicary of started alike largely due to Francis errangement and a consect of management origor, one to recommend the constitution of t casulace and so style of his carlier and stontains as maring sorser, Proce withings. The debt of later English proce to Dryden is inestimable we have it on Malone a personal testimony that the style of Burks was catefully in some measure testimany was too meaning founded on that of Dryden, on which he had often heard Barke expansion to the asset the with or any very on which so had once nearly make experience with Steen numeration and another great English writers

An Dearly from the first sold of the Article of Hours, aborton to a farke statest of Hours, aborton all of which he, in one way or another advanced in their development, at or which he is only more any or another activation in some derivatives of a whole to a underseasely store to say more, and plays, taken as a whole, form the most norable chapter in English dramatic literature after torn too more notetop coapter to congram manager morature after the door of the theatree had been once more dung open at the the cong or the meatres and peen once more many open as the restoration. In his condizionalite verse, he left acarcely any kind of poory mattempted accept the end proper to which, had his or poorly mattempted except the gold part the trade of many was made of poorly mattempted except the challenged comparts on neares wan need number of women cast continuous comparison with the frest poet who had survived into a later age, and to whom no bolitical or testitions differences each beneated Diblication and a series and an analysis and a series and a seri soon to Poutical or reagands unforences over introduced software information. But he control non paying an unatured brooms or accountance. Due no complete with marked species, a less adventurous flight in marked species. with market success, a seas autenturius ment in instituto inert, and, in diffectio, he created what may be formed a new form of its and, in the active, the creation when they we see these a flow such as the satisfical division—political matter (with a literary subsection) in satures divinion property of the boomparable fallory of characters, and the boomparable fallory of characters, and the boomparable fallory of characters, and the boomparable fallors of characters of cha ruras, in smice, or measure or me monautestate gamest to contained the careful all that sought to rival item on the own ground. His no excessed as time sought to river min on the own ground. The among the most successful attempts conscion focus from the among the name according according to the schools in polished metrical form put it is to their safficial of ensent as mich as to east man in the contract of merical term to the transfer attends of the colors are their function that they one their general freedom from fedions. ther therety was easy one may stream across countries. His shorter likecite and sulfries pieces—largely (aking the hem, an autous unnersus and seather precessive gold college of prologues and college on other partake, after their kind.

Propher to the Faller (Rivery, ed. Err vol. 11, p. 229).
Malama, R.s. vol. 1, part 3, advit, p. vol. 12, p. 229).

of the vis vivida of his longer satires. His lyrica, in their varied excellence, complete the roll of his poetic achievements.

And yet, although the epithet glorious, which for a long time has been attached to Dryden's name, seems appropriate to the powers and the products of his genius, and though time cannot chance the estimate which that epithet implies, there can be little doubt what restriction should be placed upon the tribute due to him as a great writer and a great poet. His originality was essentially originality of treatment. Partly perhaps, because his temperament was alow and reserved, and because his mind seems never to have been thoroughly at work till he had his pen in his hand, his genius was that which he describes' as 'the renins of our countrymen rather to improve an invention than to invent themselves. And his poetry-unloss in isolated places where the feelings of the individual man borst the bonds the feeling of shame in the ode Te Anne Killimen the feeling of melancholy, mingled with a generous altroism in the lines to Congrere the feeling of noble scorn for what is base and mean in some of his satire the feeling of the sweetness of life and youth in a few of his lyrica-touches few sympathetic chords in the heart. Nor does it carry the reader out of himself and beyond himself into the regions where soul speaks to soul. How could it have done so! This was not his conception of his art, or of the practice of it.

The mms parts and application which have made me a poet might have raived me to any honours of the gows, which are often given to men of as little learning and less honouty than rayself?

Yet, oren so, it were unjust as well as ungrateful to think of Dryden as a crattenan who, by dint of taking infinite pains, learnt the secret of simulating that which in the chosen few is inhorn What he was not, he at no time made any pretence of being. What he did, he did with the whole strength of one of the most rigorous intellects given to any poet ancient or modern, with constant generosity of effort, and, at the same time, with masculine directness and clear simplicity of purpose. And, though the work of his life is not marble without a flaw yet the whole structure or overtops the expanse of contemporary English literature like the temple shining from the Sunian height over the sex.

¹ Prefect to the Pailles (Emeys, al. Ker vol. 11, p. 255).
2 Examen Particion (1875) (Examps, ad. Kor vol. 11, p. 21.

CHAPTER II

SAMUEL BUTLER

SATTIRE, the humorous or canvile criticism of men a faults and SATIRE, toe numerous or causes critical or must a main a main and follows in all their manifestations, the hotel pot or farrage as Juvenal calls it, of the regardes of human conduct, is justly chimed surreas cam is, or the ragaries of number continues a justily comment by Quintilian as an entirely Latin or Italian product. So only as or vumman as an entirely havin or tissian product. co carry as Ennius (b. 239 R.O.), the lass safers or olds podride of scraps of runnes (i. xos mill) no man somer or our pourme or sursis or present on the polynomial of the compounded bot it was not till Lucilius had ecasoned it with Italian vinegar one it was not the reduction could be looked upon as sattre in the modern sense of the word. This ingredient, however Horace declares, was scase or the water time agreement absorer abstace occurre, was to a kitch outcome with active to press a the out-dreek comedy. The parabases of Aristophanes certainly contain this element though the concentration of their aim and object and encured known has concentration or more and and oneces preclude the title of the discursive satura. Lucilius, the inventor of the xine of confusions—the founder of the morning style—was also its oblef exponent, and it is interesting to note that to and in their exputers, and it is interesting to more that, in Lincillon, each of his three moreoners—Horace, Jurenal and Peralus Language, cam on the surpos autocomparation aces, out came and a treatment of the form of full of moral maxime and workly windom Jureant, his flery tou or moral maxima and worself washed surface, no nery declarations against vice and Persina his homilies in praise of occurnations against hypocrity When Horaco asserts that Lucilies various and agreement dypocated. It must choose asserts the resource ball for the faithful books to record every mood of his had recourse to the natural treets to record every most or an impressions on all subjects, he reminds more modern readers of impressions on an enough, no remines more autoest remore to the practice of Montaigne, who charms us by his talk about himself and by his carefully recorded experiences on that subject d by an encounty intermed appendix as was surject.

All these disales were conveyed in Letin hazameters, which

All successions were conveyed in Manus maximum and annual for the line of a hybrid, limey-wooley composition, i.e. in many words with Great words. This slipshod rene became the international metre for sailre in Latin down the ages, whether in File. Ret. Rise, proof. § 8 Loreth to promise smooth is still messen.

the Asti Claudianus of Alain de l'Isle or in the macaronic Boldus of Merlin Cocai (Teofilo Folengo). In the same way 'splayfoot citosyllablo rimes became the medium of English satire, derived, robably, through the French, from Le Roman de la Rose latirical writing found a congenial soil in France, where the interminable chansons de gaste required a relief. Thus were recoduced Le Roman de Resart and the fubles bestiaure, often attributed to Yaopet, the French counterpart of Acsop. But Le Roman de la Rose stands out as the most important production of the kind and as exercising a widereaching influence on the literature of Europe.

From this source flowed numberless compositions, on two sublects especially, one being the querelle des femmes, which was taken un vicorously on both sides. Christine de Pisan leads the attack arginst Le Roman de la Rose, followed by Jean Gerron, chancellor of the university of Paris, Alain Chartler and Martin de France, author of Le Champion des Dames (1440-9). On the other side may be mentioned Les XV jowes de marrage. Les gretts d'amour the Silva septialis of Johannes Neviganus and Rabelais in the third book of his Pantagraed but the catalogue is a very long one. The other subject is an attack on the religious orders, especially the mendicants, the Dominicans and the Franciscans. who had been recognized by the popes in the beginning of the thirteenth century and, from the very first, had shown extraordinary activity and influence, proving very obnoxious to the regular clergy These two subjects can be traced in Hudibras, but in another and curious form the nonconforming sects taking the place of the mendicants as butts for satire, and Hudibras and the widow respectively leading the attack and defence in the querelle des femmes.

Butler had also probably read Barelay's Ship of Fools, translated from Schastlan Brant's Agreemelty Morine Encounter might well supply him with a model for his satire, while the Adagua of Eramus undoubtedly furnished him with a stock of learning and literary flustration. Rabelais was thoroughly versed in all these writings, and employed them in his Garpantes and Pantagraci. Butler was a good French scholar and did not need Urqubarts translation, but read the French at firsthand Zachary Greypoints out in his notes several passages in Hudibras derived from the French sathrist but many more correspondences can be detected by a closer comparison.

t de to this, see tol. TE, ober E.

Samuel Butler

Only acanty materials for an account of Sonnel Butlers life survive. The son of a farmer he was born at Strenslam in Wor survine, 400 son or a narmer no was norm as orrenamm in noc conternine, 8 February 1619, and died in London in the year 1620. consecution of a constantly source, and unou in asymptom in the year soon.

He was educated at the outhedral achool at Worcester and, Judging the new outcomes are true understanding actions as in outcaster and, judging by his proficiency in classical literature, must have been exceedingly oy as prounted in cassical automate, must have been excessingly well grounded. Afterwards, he lived in or near Ounbridge, but acu grounuca. Alternatus no men us near comoringo, con does not seem to have entered at any one of the colleges or to have noes not seem to make enterted as any one or one courses on as more not seem to make the se occur a memorer or the university Later ne was enguged as an attendant or accretary to Elimbeth, counters of Kent, at Wrest in attenuant or accretary to animote, counters of Acid, at 1160 and findercastic.

This was an important period of his life, for John recurrently the was an important period of his me, nor some Selden, the accomplished lawyer passed at least three long ratesfore certain, me accompanied mayor leasest at least three long vacations (1620-8) under the same roof, and interested blasself in Butler (tong-of) under one mane root, and interested nimes in notice it may perhaps, be fanciful to find in the lawyers fondness for is may permaps, we measure to more in the marger's mornicas to illustration and analogy in his Table Table the suggestion of the materation and analogy in an states state the augmentation of his subjects in the droll similes and comparisons that meet us often in Butler's writings.

Some years of his early life were spent in the capacity of clerk some Jesus of the party the ware spens in the capacity of county magistrates but the most important of these employments was that under 8h Samuel Luke of Cop or turns corprorued was unit uniter for connect state, or cop-Hoo near Redford, who was a function puritan, one of Oromwell too near neuron, who was a measured purment one of ununwed colonels in the civil was and acontinueter for Bedfordshire and concerns in this civit was and sometimeser for nonnecessare an approximation of the sections as house were frequent meetings of members of various religious and political sects, and meetings of medices of targons rengands and james seed, and Butler had an opportunity of noting the peculiarities and pretentions notice the an opportunity of noting morphogenia in precontour a motile of a motiley crew which he afterwards mercileady ridicaled in his os a money crew which he alterwards institutestly rencented in the composed many of his Characters came epa. Here, no nome, we composed many or ma Constitutors, which sometimes appear in his Hadibras, though some and notes, which sometimes appear in the institution, sometimes acree obviously written, partly at least, after the of the Contractors were ourstoney withcost, partry at losse, after two restoration. One internet and internet on siene contractors into appeared (but hot till 1759) in The General Remains in Force and appeared (our not in 1709) in 1200 consume measure in 1 case was 1200 of Mr. Samuel Buller edited by Robert Thyer and recently True of air commen namer curiou of novors their and records airty-eight more, together with a number of miscellaneous Observations atty-signt more, together with a number of inacculanceous over-contous and Reference, have been published! In 1000, Butlet extons one agreement in the compound of the resident of the re became screens to interact, carr to curvers some pressurers to form appointed him stoward of Ludlow Carrie, where hang two appointed man actuary of routes casing water many Characters and other compositions were written out his many contractors and under compositions were written out the for the press as they came afterwards into the hands of his

After the restoration, Butler published the first part of his After the resonation, nation pursuance the first part of the Middleras in 1603, the second part in 1664 but the third part did or see the light till 1678. It was at once received with great Ed. Waller, A. R. (Cambridge English Chastier), 1808.

otherisam, especially by Charles II, to whom it became a kind f endemones, and who rewarded the poet with a gratuity f $2001

It is recorded that Butler contracted a marriage with a wealthy sidow, but that they lost their property by unfortunate speculations, unther story attributes this loss to the rescality of lawvers and ecounts thus for the exceeding bitterness with which the poet smill them. But this is an obscure point, even the lady's name not known for certain. If the question could be satisfactorily letermined, light would possibly be thrown on the relations of findilpses and the widow in the third part of the poen. It seems, newerer tolerably certain that Butler passed the rest of his days a needy chromatances and died in abject penury. This is attested by an epigram full of bitterness on the subject of a monument preciod to his memory in Westminster abbry in 1780.

While Butles, needy Wretch, was yet alive No Generous Patron would a Dinner give. Bee blue when starv'd to death and turn'd to Dust Presented with a monumental Bust. The Poof's Pate is here in Emittem show'n; He selved for Breed and he preceived a Stone.

We have seen that he was well taught in Latin and Greek but we learn from one of his Contradictions that he gave up his Greek studies after he had left school as unnecessary except to Dunces and Schoolmasters, and, in his Thoughts on Learning and Knowledget, he repeats that Greek is of little use in our times unless to serve Pedants and mountebanks to amatter withal there is, how ever considerable evidence that he kept up his Latin, especially in the satisfies Horace, Juvenel and Persius, from whom he derives many thoughts and similes Lucan, also, he parodies in a notable possenge? In his proce writings (Refections, etc.) he shows that he had read Lucretius excefully he employs that poets language in illustration remarks aimed at the newly formed Royal Society or as they were styled, the Virtuod of Gresham College. He freely showers ridicule on Sir Paul Neale, probably the original of the astrologer Sidrophel (perhaps a parody of Astrophil') and on Lord Brounker president of the Society who, in the poem entitled The Elephant in the Moon, is dubbed Virtuoso in chief.

³ Three expendity if the difference in the value of memory he remembered, the chowration of Dennis (Reflections on Pope's Erroy on Orbitism, p. 189), that Darkwas factual of the same time that the king bad his book in his poster is hardly i to Charles II.

^{*} p. 200 (ed. 1901)

⁴ L 2 (33-602

A knowledge of English is wand legal phrascology is completions A king reason business are also repeated, it is the technical law in me writings, but, as images to expected, it is the occurrent max appertaining to the office of a justice of the peace rather than that appertuning to the outer of a justice of the peace federal may of a constitutional layer though his intercourse with Selden may or a communication in your enough the uncoroning with their department

The popularity of Hudibras caused the growth of a fungus crop of spurious initiations of Butlers prose and poetry which crop or spanous numerous or namers prose and poeury which were published under the title The Posthemous Works of Mr. were primmere under sociation in a commission of orac of act and Buller Author of Hudibras, being a collection of Satires, Specific and Reflections of those times. Four or five of these operates and agreeness of those times cour or are or toes productions were published afterwards in The General Remains pronoctions were purchased afterwards in Are Universe Manufactures but, for the most part, the collection consists of ballads, long poems but, for the most part, the confection constants of contains, horse process and company on various subjects relating to the times of the rebellion. and essays on various subjects relating to the times of the recommon.

A current stamination will show them to be of distinctly inferior. A cursory examination will surve dient to be of manufacturing and they are of little service in illustrating the great satisfied in the service in the servi mericani survivo on mano servivo in minutano que gresa santi. This worthless publication reached a sixth edition in 1754 and i nay have been this circumstance that induced John Clark to whom may nave been une circumstance una mouveu John Charles, to with The General Remarks came from Charles Longueville, the son of And occasing a newconst came from outside acceptance, the way of Buller's friend William Longueville, to entrust them for publication nances arrange or man acceptance of the public library at Manchotter in to movers inyer accepts in the photos making up the collection had been notemer 1/0s. The lactor message up the concessor has been suffered out fair in Butler a own handwriting when left to William written out tarr in source a own composed in the rough some Longueture, our many of them before Hadibrat, seeing that they Jours carrier many or mean reason that some of the same matter in common. They consist of a have some or sub-source measurer in common. Anny common or rolume of prose containing Characters and a few speeches, roune or prose contain politicians on stated occasions, per in the mounts or cortain politicians on stated occasions, with letters pro and cost, similarly conceived to these are added with feiters pro und cost, amountly concerved to these are andeed come occasional thought. The second rolume is mainly in verse, some occasional inorgans and manning running is usually in verse, beginning with The Elephant in the Moon directed against Sir regiming with the configuration to the strong uniform against on Paul Acade, a member of the Royal Society. The elephant is THE PARTY PARTY IN THE PARTY AND EXCEPT AND EXCEPTIONS IN the moon turns out to be a fly in the telescope which had been directed to the moon for observations. Curiously enough, this circulated to the moon are conservations. Curamany converse, was subject in treated metrically finite over—in octonyllable rene, Butler a special metre, and then in the rimed decaryllables apily nations special mostle, and then in the rinors uncasionates aper-employed by Dryden and Pope. It seems as though Butler had emperimented to find the most suitable vehicle for his smire. experimented to med the toost sentence venante on the sentence. This poem is followed by nine setting, one or two of which are

The subjects of these are the absurdity of human actions and and surpose of successions the authority of manage actions and speculations the licentious times of Charles II (long rerae): gaming the troubles of verse and rime¹, the fooliab changes of fashlou, the abuse of wine promiscoom marriages (long verse) plagtaries the abuse of human learning. The stric and method of these satires are naturally suggestive of the influence of the Roman satirists, which may often be traced in Hudibras. Inserted among these are other satirical poems, mainly on political subjects, the most notable being on Philip Nyes Thankegiving Beard. (Nye was an independent and a member of the assembly of divines, who had made himself notations by a peculiar beard?) The collection concludes with a large number of Huscellaneous Thomphis in epigrammatic form, many of them containing hitter reflections on the poets ullifortupe in life and the undescreed success archived by impudent self-assertion some are on the faults of government and the rulers of the state—a medley of melanchely pessinistic thoughts.

The Characters must have been suggested by the fashlon

The Characters must have been suggested by the feables brought into vogue by Cassubons translation of Theophranians Characters in 1692, feebly imitated by bishop Hall, and superficially by Sir Thomas Overbury, and exemplified more effectively in Earles Microcotmographies (1628—33)³ Earle was a fellow of Metton and a great friend of Lord Falkland Charendon, who met Earle at Falkland's country house, Great Tew near Oxford, and was much taken with the refined scholar, refers to Microcotmographie as some very witty and sharp discourses which brought the author into repute. It might, therefore, be an interesting matter for speculation as to how for Charendon limined was indebted (for suggestions at least) to the numerous essays of this kind during the first half of the seventeenth century in composing the wooderful delineations of character which are the chief ormanents of his History of the Rebellion.

Batler's Character's remained in manuscript for about a century and, though brought to light in 1750 in The Geneme Remains, they have by no means received the attention they deserve. While, perhaps, not closely adhering to the model of Theophrastus, they are full of witty sallies and quips which bring into relief the absurdities and hypocrisy displayed by the presbyterian members of Sir Samuel Luke's coterne. Butler had a special genius for noting points of comparison and making similes from small matters in 10. 135 ff and Mil. m. 191-1.

¹ This is translated from Dolian's second Satire as was pointed out to the writer of this chapter by Mr A. A. Tilley

Be is referred to in Hadiwer 11, 2, 519—511; and in Hadilran's Frietle 1, 188, CL, as to the generic and growth of the character skrink, once vol. 17 along, 271, common life, or from extraordinary relations of travellers or obcommon me, or ment characteristical resources or materials of our servers in fantastic science, such as Sir Kenelm Digby and Cornelius servers in interesting accesses, some as one accession angrey same consensus.

Agrippa, his bent being committally materical, he had, while with Agripps are cent cents concurred saturday, no men, while with Sir Samnel Luke, a rare opportunity of observing and recording or cannot made by the cateranillar brethren, the self the rerelations made by the caterwanting pretures, the styled saints, whose pretentions he unmarks in his Hudibran

Net of his charactors are merely general but others, especially Diago of the Control and Decreit Sciences out others, especially the longer such as A Modern Politicism. An hypocritical Mon-conformirt, A Republican, A State-Convert, A modern Augustionan, A Fifth Monarchy man, A small Poet, A Lawyer Octourness a risus assurance y mans, a assurance, a lawyer A Virtuoso A Justice of Pouce, A Fanatic, An Hermetic A virtues A summe of reace, A ranging, An itermetic Philosopher are evidently to be referred to actors on the political removement are evocately to be reserved to actors on the fourteen stage of that time, and must have supplied matter for Hudibras rage or that time, and must cave supplied matter for in manufactures are passages that have so close a resemblance to their counter there are passages was have an ease a resummance to hier counter parts in the poem that one must have been derived from the other parts in the promitted one instalt have been derived from the though there are some points in the Characters which show that though more are some families in one communication wanted in party after 1064.

by must navo used written (as seast in party after 100-2.

Of Earlo's characters, about ten coincide in their subject with Of Large characters, about ten councils in their successful those of Butler and it is interesting to compare the different style toose of Butler and it is interesting to compare the different style of freatment to be found in these writers. But, in every case, the of treatment to be found in these writers. But, in every case, the method is the same. The character is drawn not in outline, but by mentou as the same. And constructer as unawa not in curums, our or a number of minor traffs that all tell in the same direction till the a number or minor wants that an ion in the same currection in the portrait is fully completed. The beaeting an of the artist in this portruit is mmy competed. The often does not know when to take his and to uncurrence as season of orient three not allow when to seasoms hand from the plottire, and goes on elaborating details till the ager is wearrest.

Healthrus may be described as a mock-heroic poem dealing Attenues may be occasional as a mock-nervice poem occasion, with the pretensions and bypocrisics of the prechylerians, indewith the precommus and dispersion of the prompters in de-pendents and other sects which were subversive of the moments. pendents and other sects when were sourcestre of the mountain at the time of the great rebellion. Though it was not published as the sime of the feature of Charles II, Butler's sympathics were in there are recoverable to that he per so far as we know was empaged ariently rovering the map peut so far as we know was the support of his convictions. His object in putting only around in support or one conversions. His others in putering together in a consideration poem an account or too wrette and opinions which he had quietly recorded during the courtelities opinions when he had quiently recovered curing the contribute struggles of the nation must have been to ingratiate himself with atregates or the majors more mayo been to ingratize o misson with the king after his return. The impelling motive may well have been porcety together with the desire of fama

The first known attempt at mock berole poetry was Batra-The man annual anomals as mock nervice poemy was morra-chomposencian, or the battle between freez and mice, a bur components, or one one occasion stage and more a our capital on the Hard, at one time abundly attributed to Homes seague on the single, as one sure sometros; attributed to counter.

Batler of course, was acquainted with this poem, and wittily parodies title and subject in his Cynarctomacky or Battle between Bear and Dogs. He was probably influenced, also, by Skelton, who, although a man of learning attacked cardinal Wolsey and the clergy in short rimes of 'convival coarseness and boisterous vigour.' But Butler's model in style, to a very great extent, must have been Scarron, almost an exact contemporary whose Virgille transats was published in 1648-52 so Butler, who was versed in French literature, could easily adopt the salient features of this poem in Hadibras, which was not published till 1663. On the other side, Scarron shows acquaintance with English effsirs, e.g in the following couplet

D'un chié vient le grand Ajaz Fier comme le milerd Fairfus

Viry trang lin, I.

His method is to modernise the language and actions of the ancient Vergilian heroes, and to put in their mouths the phrases of the (common) people of his own time. In the same mocking spirit, he introduces glaring anachronisms, such as the appearance of Moisummadous at the foundation of Carthage, Dido saying grace before meat, etc.

The name 'Hudibras is derived from The Pages Ouerage (11, 9, 17), and the setting of the poem is obviously imitated from Don Ourrote save that the imitation is a complete reversal of the attitude of the original. Corvantes treats the vanishing chivalry of Spain in a gentle and affectionate spirit, while showing the impossibility of its continuance in the changed conditions of life. In Don Quezote, every element of grandour and nobility is attributed to the most ordinary and meanest person, building, incident or surrounding an inu is a castle, an inn keeper a knight, flocks of sheep are armies, a burber's basin is a golden helmet in the vivid imagination of the knight a mess of acorns set before him prompts a discourse full of regret at the passing away of the Golden Age when Nature berself provided simple, wholesome fare for all, without necessity for resorting to force or fraud and justice prevails throughout. Notwithstanding the absurdity and impossibility of this revival, the readers sympathy is ever on the alde of the chiralric madman, even in his wildest extravamence. In Hudibras, on the contrary the blasoning or description of the knight and muire, while following the most accredited forces of chiralric romance serves only to set forth the edions equalor of the modern surroundings. The kulchts mental 2 Bee, as to Bralten, ante vol. III, alian, sr pp 672.

qualifications are given in great detail and, after that, his bodily quaincations are given in great detail and, uter time, ins bodily a rein of satirical engineering. Butler's accomputations—at in a vem of saturday exaggeration. Outlier a proce is to show everything in its vilest supert. Instead of purpose is to says prorysing in the rivers surject. American on making common affairs noble in appearance, the poem reveals the making common access source in approximate, one poem revenue too contras processors or the purious angest by occarious over me equipment and that of his squire squalld and begranly while his equipment and triat of the square and organity and one purpose is not to excite pity for the poverty and wrotchedness of purpose is, sue to excise put sur sue poverty and wroccooniess of these pitting champions, but to provoke contempt for the discussing stress putting committees, not to provide automative for the metiched pair and to bring down further odium conductor or the wretched pair and to being down nurses common fig. It is genre painting with a vengeance, and fully realises upon it. It is genre painting while a renigeance, and many realises the account given by Pliny of the art of Piracicus. (He pointed me account given by ramy or too are or runescens are pennion the pennion of food, and the like, thus setting the name of "painter of low life" (frespethe day, and giring the highest pleasure by such representations. peeper) and giving the nightest pressure by such reprosentations.

Our own Morland and Hogarth well answer such a description, Out that designate and inspected well answer along a description, and we are fortunate in possessing Maximalions of Hadibras and we are formulate in possessing limitations or manneral designed by the latter. The sympathy between the painter and o poes must have been computed.

That Hadlings going forth a colonelling is intended to After American Sound forto a constraint in intension is represent Sir Samuel Loke is made pretty olear by the speech

To ayou as pus pen of comband For person, paris, address and beauti

He is described as a true blue presbyterian ignorant conceited, no a toperature as a step time paramyterisis, secretary contents, a pretender to linguistic mathematical and potentic, ordinary a presenter to instrument mannerments and dislocitical learning, bent on a thorough going reformation by means of apostolic blows and knocks. In arternal appearance, means or a most droll restricty. His board was crange brown. the was of a most drun rustiony are count was reasize the many of the manufacture of the (Jennaja copera mon amap ayos amasagaring como, or according booms he had a managaring como, or according to the common he was unknown because he sample occur in a manage may am to was maximps occur on the de yourd not to trim it till the monarchy was put down. He men vowen not to true it the monarchy was not nown the was numerican and anomal by a promoterant parama, atomore with country fare of milk and butter. His doublet was built the sing country take to make any touter the updates are broof against bloom coons more success by an party and was how assume one from a cudgel, but not against swordcute. His trunkhose were foll of providious even his sword had a basket-hill to hold broth, and was so little used that it had worn out the scabbard with rust having been exhibited only in serving warrants. His dagger was sering seem commerce only in serving seriance. The seed of seriangle seem that solution cheese. His bolster contained many plateds which proved medal in catching rate in the locks, snapping on them when they foraged amongst his garmenta for cheese. Don Quixote took no thought as to how be should obtain austerrance, while Hudibras was an itiperant larder

All this is adapted from Cervanies or Rabelais, who themselves paredled the chivalric remances in the apparelling and biasoning of their heroes in the same vein, Butler goes on to describe the steed and the squire. The heroe was mealy mouthed, blind of one eye, like the mare of Rabelais's Catchpole' and wall-eyed of the other there are also reminiscences of Rostinants and of Garganius mare. It was of a grave, majestic pace, and is compared with Caesar's horse, which would stoop to take up its rider while this one stooped to throw Hudibras. The saddle was old and worn through, and the horse's tell so long and bedraggled that it was only serviceable for swishing mire on the rider

Ralpho the squire is an independent, with a touch of the analoupist, despising booklore and professing to be learned for salvation by means of gifts or new-light, in the phraseology of those sects. Here comes in a loan from Rabelais in the account of Ralphos mystic learning. Her Trippa in Pantagraci² is based on Henricus Cornelius Agrippa of Actienheim, author of Decedita Philosophia, these writers and Pythagurean numbers are employed in the description of the squires accomplishments in quack astrology and almanae writing. Ralpho is a tallor and like Acness and Dante has seen hell—a sartorial term of the age. meaning a receptuale for shreds and craps.

As the pair ride forth, the true romantic method is followed, beginning with a comic invocation of the muse, who

With ale and riler fiquors Didn't impire Withers, Pryn and Vickars, certain presbyterant poetasters, the last of whom is said in Butler's 'Annotations to have translated Virgills Execute into as horrible as Thresty in carnest as the French Scarrow did in Butlesque. This introduces the action, which is brought about by the discovery of a rabble intent on bear builting. The knight looks upon this as 'level and anti-Christian, and it may be intended to represent the 'insolency of the late tumults described in Eilon Busilie which was accepted by the royalists as the composition of Charles I. The leaders of the rebellion are there styled boxefers or known incendiaries, a term here used by Butler probably in allusion to its occurrence in the tract, and explained in his 'Annotations as a French word and, therefore, necessarily under stood by persons of quality. Bear balting is qualitly derived from the constellation Ursa Major, which circles round the pole. The knight finds in this Oywardowachy a plot to set brother against brother so as to provent them from offering a united front on behalf of a thorough reformation.

on behalf of a thorough reformation.

As in Rabelais and Don Quirote, it is the conversations that bring into relief the convictions and prejudices of the interlocutors, so, in Hudibras, the alternations between the knight and squire, which often degenerate into recriminations, are intended to unmask the hypocritical contentions of both parties. In the very first canto, the suspicion that was rife between the presbyterian knight and the independent squire is brought out, and the warmth of religious partinanship is heightened on every subsequent occasion.

The description of the warriors on the other side, that is, the bear bailers, is humarous in the extreme. They consist of a one-legged fiddler Orowdero (from crystal, an old word for a fiddle), a bear ward, a butcher, a tinker Magnano (the Italian equivalent for locksprith), a virage named Trulis, a cobbler and an outler These have been identified by Sir Hoger l'Estrange, who was a contemporary, with men who obtained posts in Cromwell's army and gained subsequent distinction. The vit and humour lavished on the description of these worthles is extraordinary and may be exemplified in one or two cases. Talgol, the butcher had made many orphans and widows, and, like Guy of Warwick, had alain many a dun cow he had fought more flocks of sheep than Aya. or Don Oulsote, and slain many serpents in the shape of ways.

Cerdon, the cobbler is compared to Hercules in the repair of wrong (in shoes)

He raised the lew and fortiffd

The weak against the strongest Side.

Colon, the ostler, is compared to a centaur for his riding, and Stardy he was and no less able. Than Hercules to cleanse a Stable;

As great a Drover and as great

A Critic too in Hog and Nest.

A question as to whether He Or's Horse were of a Family Hors worshipful:

but antiquaries gave their decision,

And provid not onely Herse but flows, Nay Pigs were of the elder Henre; For Beasts, when Han was but a place of earth knowed, did th' Earth possess. Butler's peculiar trick of giving the characteristics of each person by parallels of similar accomplishments in some noted hero, but in Indicrous travesty, is, doubties, imitated from Scarron. Rabelais delights in finding in ancient history and literature parallels to his modern instances, but does not go further except where the general tone of the speaker dramaticulty requires it but, with Butler's mocking humour the method is reversed, and it is only for the purpose of debasing it in the application that a striking instance is found.

In order to bring Hudibras into contempt from the first, he is represented as antious to put down bear boiling, one of the most popular ammements of the time, and substituting for it the cult of the solemn league and covenant, which was thrust upon the English by the Scottish presbyterians. The knight feels bound, in consectence and commission too, 'to keep the peace twist dog and bear, and dobs the whole proceeding 'pagan and idolatrous. The squire consents to this, but, from his point of view as an independent, instast that, if there is no scriptural warrant for bear baiting, peither is there warrant for Provincial, cheeks, national, Mare leman creature coheche all.

These three words, specially applied by the presbyterians to their various synods, make Hudibras susplcious of his squire but he puts off the argument, because it is now time for action.

The description of the battle is rendered more absurd by the high-flown epic voin in which it is set forth. The metrical devices of penses in particular places are duly observed, as well as the repetitions of emphatic words, such as

He Trulla loved, Trulla more bright, sin.
And gave the Champion's Steed a thump
That stagger'd him. The knight did stoop, stol-

The boar having been budly manied in the buttle, the retreat is saved by the cobbier Cerdon and by Trulla, who leads

> The Warrior to a gramy Bed, As Authors write in a cool Shade, Which Egiantine and Roses made, Goes by a soilly marmying Streen, Where lovers mid to loll and dram.

There is true an instance of aposiopesis: Which now then shall—but first our ours Host one how Hodieus doth fare, installing the Vergilian Over open-sed moter, our This is a ludicrous imitation of the first book of the Aeneed, where Venus puts Ascentus to rest in similar surroundings.

Hadibras had been victorious in the first battle and with the help of the squire, had put Crowdero in the stocks but, in a second nery on the square, not put Crowners in the stocks out, in a section encounter after the combetants have relied their forces, he is recreted, and, with Ralpho, takes the place of Crowdern. Even bere, while Hudibras

Cheer'd up himself with ends of Youne And Sayings of Philisophora

Ralpho the independent resumes his attack on the presbyterians, and we are treated to the catch words gifts, illumination, light, and we are accessed to the casted worth gene, minimum toot, night, amodical, orders, constitutions, church-censures and so forth. Anomica, orders, constitutions, constitutions are services. Challenged by the hilght, he repeats his argument that synods are unsatical bear gardens, in which saints are represented by the bear and presbyters and acribes by the dogs that are set upon them. and presoyuers and scribes of the inquisition, and they have their

To cost a figure for mon's Lapht; To find in lines of Board and Pace The Physiogramy of Grace, And by the sound and twong of None If all be sound within disclose.

The second part, which was published a year after the first, the second part, nuce was provided a just size on the process uninterruptionly with one soury teating up the case of the drat part, Huddbras had after whose whom, in the turn cause of the uras part, manufacture and after his victory wished to gain, meeting, however with discomfiture. The an victory wassest to gain, accounts moverer with uncommunity and wislow informed of this by Fauss (parodied from the fourth book of the Acard), determines to visit him in the stocks, and there entices the Acasta, accordings to vast man in the succes, and there entires him to declare himself. Thus, we have another argument between ann to occure manages. Assess a serious argumen account them, in which the knight a chameless self-seeking is exposed and soon, in which the formle sex is maintained. In proof of his good faith, Hodibras has to promise to submit to flagellation. The notion of whipping and the mode of carrying it out is borrowed notion for pullying and any more or extrying to one a converge from Don Quixoto! where Sancho Panas is called upon to endure free thousand lashes in order to obtain the discrebaniment of Dolcines del Tobose. Hedibras solemnly swears that he will carry out this beliest

The next (the second) canto is introduced by the poet as especially full of contention, and it is here that the hypocritical cannistry of the two sects who were principally concurred in the Civil war is most clearly exposed. Hodibres, after a nights reflection, does not reliab the idea of a flogging and turns to the squire for his judgment on the subject. Raipho readily proceeds to 'enlarge upon the point. First, it is heathenish to offer the sacrifice of whipping to idois, and it is sinful to do so in saints who are sufficiently bruised and kicked by the wicked. Moreover.

The Saints may elaba a Dispensation To secur and formers on eccasion.

and.

Although your Church be opposite To ours as Block Friers are to White In Rule and Order; yet I great You are a Reformed's Sanat.

He then, with pungent raillery particularises brenches of faith on the part of the 'sainta. They broke the allegiance and supremesty outh, and compelled the nation to take and break the protestation in favour of the reformed religion, to swear and forswear the soleum league and covenant, to enter into and then disclaim the engagement to be true to the government without king or peers. They swore to fight for and against the king, insisting that it was in his defence, and also for and against their own general Essex. They swore to maintain law religion and privilege in parliament, not one of which is left having sworn to maintain the House of Lorda, they turned them out as dangerous and meless.

If this be so in public life, a mint in private life can be no more bound by an oath.

> A Saint 's of th' heavenly Realm a Perri And as no Perr is bound to recer But on the Grapel of his Henor Of which he may dispose as Owner; It fellows, though the thing he forery And takes th' affirm, it is no perjury.

This suggests a gibe at the despised quakers, who nevertheless, are scrupulous in this matter

These, thinking th'are obliged to Trota, In swearing will not take an Oath.

Hadibras agrees and insists that, like a law an oath is of no use till it is broken. Ralpho, continuing, points out that a man may be whipped by proxy and

> That Sinners may supply the place Of suffering Scients is a plain Cura.

Hudibras jumps at this, and at once bids Ralpho be his substitute.

He refuses and, when Hudibras becomes abusive, reminds him of the experiority of the independent party

Remember how he Arms and Political We still have worsted all your boly Tricks; Tropessed your party with Jairrens. And took loat Granden down a ball And took four Granden was a way All that to Layren Since adhered (Legion Same is intended for the presbyterians generally under the well known composite mane Smeetymnum.) Hadibras retorts furiously uphraiding his squire as an upstart sociary and i Suck as breed out of processi Hemory

Of our own Church, him West and Thesente, And, like a Mapper in a Sore, Mould that which gave it life devent.

This, of course, refers to the numberless scots that sprang up at this time, holding often the strangest of views

The champions are proceeding to blows when they are inter-Ano manipuos are processing or owns such also see more inputed by a frightful noise caused by a suman being excerted in rupest of a rabble, for having besten her husband. Hudbres must needs interfere, being particularly scandalised by the dishonour dope to the sex that furnished the saints with their first aposition. He enlarges on the help women have given to the aponing. The contarges on the map weather mays given to the connect, in language that might be a parody of Hooker' but the cause, in any way was inguis to a packet or account. The half ages and similar projectiles, so they are radium ners open threat with cases and annual pulpowing, so they are field to each no with the loss of their sworts. Haddlers consolos grad to recape with any new or areas awards. Attourous consensation himself, seeing a good omed in his having been polited with dire

Was destind to the Empire for h

The third canto introduces a new element. By Raipho a advice And the sententials the notion of consulting an astrologer Sidner phel, as to his prospects in the pursuit of the widow. The question pact, as to the permissibility of consulting a person who is scripturally hanned is decided in his favour—mints may employ a conjurer The description of Sidrophel and his any Wheelman, an anoder and the country in the little interior to the account of Hadibras when his center, is one made number to the second of authorized and the spire at the beginning of the poon. Much of it is derived and the square at the regimning of the poem. Since of it is derived a great number of methods from natural a gross natures of additions and the additions of distraction.

Butter however makes considerable additions from his own store, derived from the superstitions of common life. At first, Hudibras is impressed by the extraordinary know ledge displayed by the astrologer but, afterwards, in matching his own store of learning with it, finds himself disabused, especially when Sidrophel quotes as a rocent event a fletitious adventure of his own, which had appeared in a spurious continuation of the first part of Hudibras. This leads to the usual senflie, in which the astrologer and Whinchum are worsted, and Ralpho is despatched for a constable, while Hudibras, under the false impression that Sidrophel is dead, makes off, intending the squire to bear the charge of murder and robery, though he himself has rununaged the astrologer's pockets.

This is the conclusion of the first and second parts of the poem, published respectively in 1603 and 1664. The third part, which takes up the story was not published till 1678, and shows considerable difference in the treatment of the subject.

Unlike the earlier parts, it contains very few classical allusions, and these are of the most obvious kind, such as the Troisn horse and Cerberus, the style, too, is smoother and requires less ex planation. This may be the result of experience and of hints received by the writer in the intervening years. But the thread of the story is taken up without interruption. The knight, having determined to ablure Ralpho, makes his way to the widow's house but, unfortunately for him, the squire had formed the same resolu tion and forestalled him. When Hudibras appears, the lady is found fully informed on all points and is able to oppose a true account to all his false claims of suffering on her behalf. The controversy for and against marriage again betrays the knight s unscrupulous selfishness, and a finishing stroke has set forth his contemptible character, when a low knocking is heard at the gate. and, fiving in terror into a neighbouring room, be bides under a table. He is ignominiously drawn out and cudgelled by (as he supposes) Sidrophels diabolical agents. Under the influence of superatitions terrors, he confesses the motives that impelled him in his suit and answers to a catechism which divalges all his iniquities and, that nothing may be wanting to complete his humiliation, he mistakes his aquire Ralpho, who has been similarly beaten and left in the same dark room, for a more or less friendly spirit whereupon, the pair make confession of the enermities perpetrated by the rival sects in the civil wars.

The final act of the burlesque follows in the third canto of this part, the second being a satirical account of the death of Cromwell and of the intrigues of the various parties before the restoration.

The knight, having been withdrawn from his place of torture on and anight maring occur measurement from the peace of control of the spoke to control of the spoke to control a lawyer At first, he cries down this acheme, in order to adopt it afterwards At the the circa down this scheme, in order to adopt it affects and as his own. He adopts it ungracionally since he has no better as mu own. The adopter it ungraciously since he mas no oction course and consoles himself with the, often misquoted, couplet

Is of his east Opinion still.

Butler now has an opportunity of exhibiting a lawyer in what be probably considered a true light. The advice this person gives no prussany consumercu a seue agus, and autico mes persons gives exemplifies the use that was made in the older jurisprudence of constitute are used to getting round legal emetiments, and Hodibras is instructed to ply the widow with love letters and

With Trains of tarrelgie and surprise Her heedless America and Replies.

This counsel is followed, and we have the knight's letter and the answer in which the latter undoubtedly has the best of the argument

The second canto of the third part stands quite by itself and the scored canto or the tarre pare states quite by these and has nothing to do with the fortunes of Huddras. It is merely as account, more or loss detailed, of the principles and politics an account, more or less occasion, or the principles and pounds of the prestyterians, independents and republicans during the or use paranyomans, muspensions and reproducting during the anarchy before the restoration. Rebellion had stackened for want anarchy occurs the removation. Incommon new anaxoness for wain of plunder and presbyterian and independent were now at logger on painting and prestylerians were furned out, and were glad to become nears. The prescriptorians were surred out, and were gian to become they were served as they had treated the tunerant paracters they were served as they mad arrated the canaboptists and families as much as they cavames, and decreed the anatophana and inneries as much as they had done the papers and the prelatitis before. Now the indeand duce the parameter and the preliminal vectors. Alone the market pendents were prepared to put town over juming that the war man spared and to intrigue among themselves. Meantime, the royalists, sparred and to intrigue among measurer, accumum, the royaling, came together again on seeing their foes divided For Loyalty is still the same,

Whether it win or loss the Games Tree as a Dial to the Sun,

Although it he not shin'd spon.

Cromwell had given up his reign, Toward in a furious hurricane his feeble son had sunk under the burden of state, and now the his recovered uses some owner too natural or states, and now too some were for a ling others wished to set up the fifth monsome were for the Ramp parliament, others for a general council of officers some were for gospel government, others for connect to concers wante were nor graphs; government, owners nor pulling down presbyterian synods and clauses some, for opposing the paper putting down saints' days and demollabing churches some, for having regular ministers, others, for soldier preachers. Some would abolish surplices and the use of the ring in the marriage service, while re-catablishing the Judaic law, and putting an end to the use of the cross in baptism and to giving the names of saints to churches or streets. Others disallowed the idea of saints to churches or streets. Others disallowed the idea of the law of the property of the souls of holy men rest till the judgment.

Meantime, the 'quacks of government, such as Sir Anthony Ashley Cooper and John Lilburne, who saw the necessity of a restoration, were discussing matters in secret conclave. Butler gives a wonderful description of Cooper (which should be compared with Dryden & Achitophel) and of John Lilburne, who both make long speeches on present events and the way they should be met, but ultimately go off into violent recriminations as representatives of the presbytorians and the independents till they are suddenly interrupted by a memonger who brings the news of the burning of the members of the Rump in effigy. This gives an opportunity for some rough benter on the explanation of the word rump (especially on its Hebrey equivalent has), which is to be found in Butler s character entitled An Hermetic Philosopher 1 But, soon, the mob appear with the purpose of hauling out the members of this assembly and burning them. They bent an ignominious retreat, and this ends the second canto, which has been treated last, because it is disconnected with the main story of Hudibras.

It may be well here, in retrospect, to examine Butler's methods in the composition of his poem. The date of publication, three years after the restoration, is sufficient to suggest that it must have found an appreciative audience, at a time when the events to which it referred were fresh in men s minds, and when as we know, a violent reaction against puritanism had set in. The learning and scientific knowledge displayed, the turns of wit, racy metaphors and quaint rimes have secured its continuance as an English classic but, much of the legal knowledge having become obsolete. or being too technical for ordinary readers, and many of the minor historical allusions being forgotten, a continuous perusal of the book requires numeral perseverance. Moreover the length of some of the descriptions of persons or events is trying to the patience, although the Illustrations or parallels in themselves are portinent and acute. The sparkling wit and humour displayed enlightens and relieves the discussions which make up much of the book. Humorous as are the arguments, the witty and whimskell

¹ Charactery size od Walter & R. p. 105.

It remains to offer a few considerations on the main purpose of Builer's active—a frontal attack on puritanium. He probably was measure that a change was in progress from a because was principle and principle of the pri menute that a country disgulard by a religious updeared which consultations assumed as the groundswell after the storm of the migns to regarded as the groundswen after the storm of the reformation. He was a forrent royalist, but kept mainly to the religious side of the question.

The publication of the Authorized Version of the Bible in 1613 and set men thinking of the treasure that had fallen into their and see ment management on the seed permissionly the one book upon names, and very menty more read personemely the une une more upon which they looked as the guide to salvation. This dwelling on one which the parties of mind of many whose reading was atmostly upset the benefice of mina to many whose realing was conquering, exterminating children of Irrael, and to look upon conquering externmenting cumment or inner, and to look upon an vuo opposeu mera in pomuca or caurun accumte as men or Bellal, Monbites, Amalekites and other adversaries of Israel and of God, and as their own personal enemies, to be overthrown at or troot, and as men own porsums encures, to be orecurrown as any cost and by any meens of force or fraud. But, as Dante says

Their meditations reach not Nameth.

Examples may readily be found of similar perversions of Scripture examples may result on source or senting for versions or conjugate but an instance which stands out, by reason of the beauty of its per an impance which scanne out, by reason in the seasity or in language and the terrible nature of its demonstration, occurs in inguage and the territore matter or the tremmentation occurs in Militars tract, Of Reformation touching Church Discipline in Allicons tract, or information covering control Discourse to England, where the result assured to his own partisans and companies, where the result to his adversaries are enunciated in startling contrast!

starting contrast.

The mental exaltation arrived at by such homines wains libri-And mental characters active at 19 and services where there exers the extraordinary and rendered them capable of efforts in their was extraorunary and respect of calculation. So long as they were entimental where the conduct may have been commendable sincere in their votes, their customer may have seen commentative but it is the fate of human nature, when men have attained but it is not also of manner based when most cave attained and the height of the aucume of some means, so necessive exercise of the neages of the plantacle they have reached, and, when enthusiasm flags, to become punecro mor mano reasonat, and, when the mode of the ransauges, to unjurate miner. And, when the spots of the victors, cupidity and the baser quanto ite as see many or see various company and one owner feelings of human nature often gain the mastery over former high feedings or minant mature order gain too mastery over noticer mgn resolver. This was frequently the case in the period of the civil re and the transportation.

As an importating royalist, a native of a county that was

I These, amides the hymne and helicitishs of saints, etc.

conspications for its loyalty, Butler could admit the divine right of kings and allow that the king could do no wrong but be could not allow that the opposing party could do right, especially after the confiscations and oppressions of which they had been guilty towards the royalists and the episcopalian clergy. Moreover, the Long parliament, which had fieleded many high-minded patriots, had degenerated and dwindled into the miserable, place-loving Rump, a fit object of scorn and contempt.

Some precursors of the form and style of Hedibras have been mentioned but the strange times which it contains, and which have helped considerably to keep it in remembrance, must not be pessed by The curious jingles of ecclesiastic and a stick, 'duty and 'shoe-tie, discourse and whiskers, and many more, have recalled the poem (in name at least) to many readers to whom much of the historical detail has become obsolete. In this exercise, Bruter had a late rival in Caiverley, whose metrical skill and delicately sensitive ear would, however, not permit him to employ any moouth rime that his nimble fancy might suggest—overy line must ring true—whereas, in Butler's jog-trot lines, a monstrous rime has the effect of relieving the monotony of the verse without being out of harmony with it.

Samuel Butler, in fine, may be looked upon as a rare but erratic genius with an extraordinary gift of satirical expression, and as a man of great learning, who might have produced a serious poem of morit, had the bent of his mind lain in that direction. Dryden expressed a belief that Butler would have excelled in any other kind of metre and his powers in serious verse are sufficiently attested by the following extract from Hadibras.

The Mose pull'd off her rell of Light, That hides her face by day from sight, (Birterious Vell, of brightness made. That a both her hertes, and her chade) And in the Night as freely abon, As If her Bays had been her swn; For Darkness is the proper Sphere, Where all false (Rocke use it appear. The twinkling Sters began to muster. And gitter with their bornwil loader While Sheep the weary'd Werld reflertd, By counterfolling Death scritch!

And darrie bearen. (Foredie Lect, tit, $90.)

¹ n. 1, 906—912. The same metapher is employed by Milton in a magnifessed passage softressed in the Doity as the author and source of light, a subject which always appealed strongly to the billed post; Don't with removies light tily shirts appear.

OHAPTER III

POLITICAL AND ECCLESIASTICAL SATURE

Is the period following on the restoration of Charles II militari no political subjects took permanent root in England. It is poerly on positions subjects now permanent root in canada. At in the that there had already been saffres, like those of Cicircland and the caralier hellad-writers, written on behalf of one faction and soe carance minar-writers, arrested on bound of our received in the state against fir rival, as well as lampoons upon some foreign in the state against his trival as well as manipouns upon some location enemy but these had been sporadic, and have the appearance enemy out toese man over sportage, and nave the appearance of being not so much concerted attacks as outbursts of irritation or gramblings of the governed about their rulers. Now however, or grandwings of an organized continuous depreciation of cano the beginnings of an organised, commons depreciation of each party by the other side, with a definite end in view that once party by the outer and, with a commune one in view man, is, to exclude rival politicians from power by discrediting them is, to exclude first positions from power of discounting them in public opinion. After the king's return, there became per in priore upamer, caree the same remain, and cocame per copfilide certain features of English life, political, social and literary cepture certain restures or cogness suc, pussess, social and interact which specially favoured a new development of active literature. which specially introduce a new non-conjuscies of sauces morantic.

In politics, we have the slow integration of two parties within the to pource, we made use such surgessment or any beauties and mittally irreconcil committeen. Coverier and purious near new memory irrecovers able views on fundamental questions, and were prepared to proceed and steam on introducing them. It was otherwise with their to extramines to claim the peconing completely authorities to completely authorities authorities to completely authorities au successors, who were superior occurring completely accessorated and were then so nearly balanced in resources and so afraid of civil and were clear as meanly committee an iconources and so arrang or curvatures as to form the habit of toleration in fact, if not in theory When consistent anglicans and co-decorat prohyterians divind Humi community augustas and conscerns presupersias surpressed them the Long parliament of Charles II, their different a between them the transparent of charges it, their universe was ended on matters of practical policy on which the vanquish ! arms curous on massers or practical points on a most size and one could afford to awalt better times. Concerning the position of monarch and church, there was no real dispute. But there were monarce and march, there was no real uniforce. Dut were were direngences as to what measures of immediate import should be directed as to was accurate of manuals unport anomo or taken by the monarch and as to what extent of conformity was expedient in the church and the actions of the restoration expected in the country and the section of the removation of the emporters and opponents coalescing among themselves, and in the sequel, forming the court and the country parties. A process which, at first, was very gradual, furnished forth the two combatants in nerminial duel.

At the same time, new social conditions came into being with the increased preponderance of London in the national life, and with the new and strictly urban habits which Londoners were forming. Town and country were becoming more differentiated than they had ever been before and the townsmen, among whom we may include many members of the aristocracy who spent part of the year in London, composed an apt audience for the new kind of literary political warfare. Coffee-house and park gave an atmosphere where antire could flourish, while the increased facility of communication both altered the tastes of the country centry by bringing them to town and maintained their allegiance to the supremacy of London by allowing the steady transmission of newsletters and pamphlets from the capital to the provinces.

Lastly the revolution in literary ideals was peculiarly suitable for satire. Here, at least, in invective on men and things, there was ample scope for a reasoned persplouens line, dealing with life sa it was known, and for the strongly knit couplet, which simulated wit, even when not possessing it, and which was eminently well adapted for abaro, hard practicalities.

It was in the years 1969-7 when the unpopularity of Clarendon was at its height, and when the disasters of the Dutch war brought into strong relief the faults and fallures of the men in power that Sir John Denimm began the series of Caroline political antiros. However little merit his four Instructions to a Painter dour travestics of Waller's adulation which bore the same name, might possere, they started a fresh genre. Recent events, fact or fable. were narrated in the herole couplet with malign distortion or bitiog verselty It 'made my heart ske to read, says Pepys of the fourth satire in the series, 'it being too sharp, and so true. Andrew Marrell, who had begun as a lyric poet, followed in Denham a wake with his Last Instructions to a Painter in 1807, the most powerful of these satires, and, from that date until his death in 1678, remained the ablest satisfat opposed to the court! Further Instructions to a Painter, An Historical Poem, Adrice to a Painter and the dialogue Britannia and Raleigh were all from his pen and, before he died, imitators, such as the author of the grimly humorous Dream of the Cabal, were springing un. The common characteristic of these compositions was their journalistic nature. They were riming pumphlets professing to 3 For a general account of Marvell's History work see auts, vol. viz, pp. 180 ft.

give actual events and court secrets, in the form either of rambling Barratires or of descriptions of persons taken scratise. For them, narrantes or or occurrences or persons manuscriment for mean and their rough couplets show very at to a superiment mean such their rough couples show real little of it. The ways of Charles II's court and government gare them only too much opportunity for sourribons obscently. Vigour wife and humour in a high degree are to be found in them Marrell was and municir in a migh begine are to be some in second mastered had a real knowledge of affairs and statementike imight. Not mu a rest anomious or aimits aim states manuary magning are personal resentment, but a strong conviction of the ords of the day nigod him on to his vituperative eatire, and he stabs home with a argui ium on to ma vitaperature sature, and no states notice vitable sectific precision. In satires of this class, however moral in accounts procusion. In saures of this case, nowever moral in digunition, although it is not absent, frequently makes but a poor organizes, accounts to an our account, including makes our a poor forward as institutation for it. Of their contemporary influence, we can hardly doubt. So they reached their aim, which was political and not at all poetic

A new turn was given to Charles II's reign and to English history by the panic of the Poptan plot in 1678-0 The clumy natury of the familia of the rolling imagination of Oates succoded areassons span from the promo magnitudes of the Incheste in garing his mean impulse to his comprehens or his manuscrip, parties. A definite political creed, anti-Romanian, and a definite parties. A menutive positions of the dake of York, were furnished to bonness and the antenness of the openions and the antenness of formats and the antenness of the country party while possible obedience and the antenness of the country party while possible obedience and the antenness of the country party while possible obedience and the antenness of the country party while possible obedience and the antenness of the country party while possible obedience and the antenness of the country party while possible obedience and the antenness of the country party while possible obedience and the antenness of the country party while possible obedience and the antenness of the country party while possible obedience and the antenness of the country party while possible obedience and the antenness of the country party while possible obedience and the antenness of the country party while possible observed the country party pa to county pury with were the teness of their opponents and or the anguest course were the course of their oppositions and from this contest emerge the historic whig and tory. Under these from this contests cancergo and mattern wing and that of the conditions of popular possion and national division, political satire

The first poet who entered the lists was John Oldham, and his special genius, the circumstances of his life and the tendencies apenas komus, une curcumatorice or ma me and the temperature of the day all compiled to make him a true pioneer. In place of or use cay an exemptron to mease that a true protect. In prace or the journalistic writings of Marvell and his like, bull platformthe Journalistic writings or starron and the like, that parameter oratory half leading-articles, he produced a active, the morit and scope of which were of a purely literary kind. He wrote sailre for Eatyr's my only province and delight batter my cary payment and oacons.

We whose dear make alone I've wor'd to writer For this I seek societion, court always for this A seek soccasion, cours areas.

To show my parts and algualize my muse!

This was an innovation, but one which it was easier for Oldham to introduce than for his contemporaries. The sou of a nonconformist minister John Oldham, he was born at Shipton Moyne, near Tetbury in Gioncestorabire, on 9 August 1653. His father subsequently removed to Newton in Wiltshire, from which he was ejected in 1669, thenceforward, he remained as a dissenting minister at Wotton-under-edge in the Coiswolds, outliving his poetic son for many years. The latter received his education at Tethary grammar school, and was next sent to Oxford, to St Edmund s hall, in 1670. He obtained his bachelor s degree in May 1674, and then left the university to reside for about a year with his father. Neither bis religious opinious at this time, we may presume, nor the indenendence of character which often flashes out in his verse, would incline him to take orders with a view to a chaplainey in some noble household and a country living as a sequel. He was evidently without means. So we find him undertaking the post of unber in Whiteift a school at Croydon until 1878, and following this by the more tolerable occupation of a private tutor first to the grandsons of a toder. Sir Edward Thurland, and, in 1681, to the son of Sir William Hickes. This has employment brought him to the neighbourhood of London and made him acquainted with the literary men of the day, to whom his poems were already known. Rochester and one or two others had indeed, apparently visited the young pediagoene at Croydon on the strength of his compositions then circulating in manuscript, but nothing had come of the interview New, bowever the new earl of Kingston rescued Oldham from his scholastic thraidon, became his natron and, on occasion, his host, and offered him, we are told, the unwelcome position of his chaplain. Be this as it may we can well imagine that the pert, satiric face which looks out of Oldham's portrait belonged to an amusing companion. The profession of a man of letters, nevertheless, in the life of the seventeenth century could not easily be carried on except under conditions of dependence if not of scryllity and Oldham's engerness to escape from compliance to them is shown by his resolve to take up medicine for a livelihood. and by the year's study which he devoted to it. But his health was breaking down he is said to have been consumptive on 9 December 1683, he fell a victim to the smallpox at Kingston a seat, Holme-Pierrepoint near Nottlasham.

This schoolmasters life must have inclined a naturally haughty, sardonke temperament in the direction of satire. He may also, have accustomed himself to make the most of a natural proneness to indignation, in order the more to impress his pupils. And the absoluces of his life from the engital, combined with the classical studies necessary for his occupation, was a fit environment for the first author of generalizing satires, where incidental railing rives place to artistle composition without toe constant a reference to

He does not seem, however to have discovered his section at once, for his carliest dated poem, The Dream, written in March value we can continue therein process, and continues, written in material 1077 was amatory in a inscious, adolescent strain. This was composed in the heroic couplet, but he was already under the completed in the neutro complete, one no was ancient minor too aleat or Cowley and, with this united size covers, was putting an his energy into Cowleyan Pindaric odes. He was not without has energy into Cowieyan rimoune over the way not without qualifications for the task, being both fecund in ideas and forelible Accountations for the sale brought out the defects of the metre the difficulty of preserving a measure of grace in a poetical form which aspired to continual hyperbole pecomes beinguilt opaions and combating pim airy Coapes as to common or becomes beinguilt opaions and combating pim air common or becomes to common or becomes or becomes the companies of the co occurre journally covious and, comparing and with covicy we may say that his trumpet has a brander sound. His vice of turnay say une me trumpes one a reason somme the year or our majority and his often successful, but invariable, method of hearing shing and me vices non-training two measures measures to making effect on effect to reach one great towering climat, were bred curs on energy or reach one grees ownering country, who occur ander Cowley's influence. Among these exercises in a tuncless motre, some three or four stand out. The early Dullyrambes, nours, some wron or near season one and oursy oursy ourses for a Margue, can claim dramatic fitness for is monotonous extravagence and has a fine rhetorical close with Hatara's convenient dark Betiring Room.

The ode Upon the Works of Ben Joneon contains just The one upon as none or none or none causeus just calleden, if it falls far short of the sublime, which is needlessly criticam, it is take for short of the samples, such is necessary against Verlag however provides a link with its authors more enduring work. Here, the Pindarique when he amend a most commented when corresponds to the toappersone is the used for a strang against virtue and on express a grandiose, if rather external, exception of rice. The I the bold Columbus, only I.

Who must new Worlds in vice desery And fix the pilings of empassable intentity

This heavyhanded fromy was taken for carnest by some of the Ann nearymenters many was made for carries of armine for readers, and Oldham thought it best to write inter a similar high form recentation. But the freet of his works in the style is the nown recursarion. Due two mosts of the stores in time says is two ode To the Homory of Hr Charles Morrows, an intimate blond ode 70 the Atemory of Air Charies Atorices, an internal atorices, whose death, in 1675, Probably long preceded the finished poem. whose users, to two, prountly one precours the manner press. In this puncarie, there is less bombast than appears in the others. and its great length makes a single movement to a climar imtour me gross rengent means a single movements to a comma amconnec in their white, and the numerous images employed cocone the subject well. On the other hand, Morwent s virtues are so universal and unlimited as to lack verisimilitude, but this is a fault of the Pindario style, and not personal to Oldham.

It was in 1078 that Okiham realized his powers—by accident, may be—in A Satyr spon a Woman, who by her Falshood and Scora was the Death of my Friend. Here, he makes use of the herole couplet, which was his really effective medium, to express the uttermost of hatred. His voice seems to rise to a hourse scream. Railing and cursing achieve a kind of attractiveness by reaching the acme of their power, although, perhaps, a few words would have spoken more of the heart. In amplitude and mag nificence, however A Satyr spon a Woman was outdone in the next year by his chief work, the four Satyrs spon the Jesuit. The first of them was printed without Oldham's consent, in 1679 and he published the whole series, with a few other poems, in 1681. They were without a dedication, a strong evidence of their author's natural haughtiness in that age of fulsome flattery.

There does not seem to be any reason to doubt Oldham's sincerity in his masterpiece. His nonconformist unbringing and popular surroundings make it quite natural that he should have shared in the frenzied ranks of the Popish plot while his usual extravagance of expression and of resentment, if they make us discount his meaning, also guarantee the reality of his sentiments. But there is also a definite artistic bear running through the poems. Oldbam enjoyed antire by his own confession, and he was a school master learned in the classics. The Prologue is after Persins the first satire, Garnes's Chost, owes its inception to the prologue by Syllas ghost in Ben Jonson's Catiline, the third, Loyolas Will, derives its 'design from Buchanan's Francisconus the idea of the fourth, St Ignatius his Image is drawn from Horace. All these varied debts, however, which Oldham himself owns, are thrown into the shade by the dominating influence of Jurenal. We do not merely find imitation of isolated passages, or even of rhetorical artifices, like the abrupt opening of most of the satires or the frequent employment of the climax. What is of the blobest importance is the generalising style and the habit of declaratory highstrained invective-the love of massed and unrelieved gloom for the sake of artistic effect. The lists of current misdeeds the contemporary criticism or misrepresentation common in the antirist's English predecessors, give place to fanciful general scenes, where he tries to represent an imaginary costary of wickedness.

The tour satires have little intricacy of design. In the first, the gheat of Garnet, the Jesuit instigator of the Ganpowder plot, addresses a kind of diabolic homily to the Jesuits in conclave after Sir Edmund Berry Godfrey's murder The second merely in reight or comment perry trouvers a marrier and second marries against the Society in the authors own person. In the third, the dying Loyola gires his disciples a role of concentrated villainy offing torous gives an anacipus a ratio or computational among in the fourth, his image relates the frauds supposed to be worked in Roman Catholic worzhip. When we come to examine the poetic qualities of these satires in detail, we are at once struck by the qualities of the versa. This shows itself not so much in the monotonous energy of the rhythm, although it would seem that it was this which mored contemporary criticism most, as in the extreme unconthness of the rimes. Oldbam could rime curolid, 'rul'd and spoil'd, together and this is not an exception, but an instance of his regular practice. In fact, he was unaware of the cacophony and, when his verse was criticised, took occasion to show that he could write smoothly by the translation of two Greek anow that he could write amountly by the transmission of any other partorals, Bees and The Lorectation for Adonts. But, in these places, his bad rimes recur with little less frequency and the lack of range in his melody is brought out the more by the comparison of the refrain in Bross, apparently due to Rochester'...

Come, all ye Hame, come, adors the Shepherd's hearse Occas, his ye as man, cours, accord to a perpose of Wish herra-fading gardends, percendying ranse-

with Oldham's own refrain in Adonis

I moura Adorie, the sad Lorse bemoon,

I mount accoration was some owners. The county fair Adonis dead and gone.

To proceed from questions of technique to matter a serious defect of these actives is their coutlinual energy ration. The hyperbole of or across measure as assess consumer configurations and approximate the first purpose being comminutory the result is an atmosphere of overcharged gloom. He accumulates horror on horror with a sole view to melodrama. The accommence morror on morror situ a sole view to menousans. And some of fronty or ordinary humour and any faculty for dexterous sense or irony or ormnery number and any memory or non-common bankined from his writings. Even the satire on his poccant printer is in the grandiose style, and his stage cannon are fired off for the event. By consequence, dramatic filmess is entirely absent from his original satires. He places his objurgations in Joseli months, making an extraordinary mixture of triumphant, conscious wickedness and bigotry The dying Loyola laments that mighty Julian mist his aims, and that thus the Hible remained undertroyed, and declares bearfor Th example of our great Society Garnet's ghost gloats over the Gaupowder plot as a riral to Hell's most proud exploit, and exhorts his successors to heretics and in saving the church. The moddle is inextricable, and the sentiments are worthy of Hieronimo.

Like Pleads and the to exret and act Π .

Yot these professed villains are somebow occupied in fighting for Oldhers's advertisement in Faunt and Francisco, edition of 12st.

To Oldham's lack of dramatic instinct must be attributed his want of variety. His only ways of creating an effect were to lead up to a climax, to pile up the agony. In their use, indeed, he was a master. Incredible blood and thunder fill the scene but they at least, make a real clamour and smell raw. There is an expansive energy and exalitation in such a passage as that on Charles IX and Bartholomew's day.

He seem d like common marketers to deal By parcels and piecennesi; he scored creall I' th trade of Deaths whole myrisks dy'd by th' great, Seem as one stagts life; so qu'eck their fats, Their very pray'ra and wishes come too late.

These lines testify to Okihama power of finding repeatedly a vivid impressive phrase, not merely by a verbal ingenuity but largely through a keen realisation of the ideas which entered his narrow range of thought. He loves to obtain his effects by the farring juxtaposition of incompatibles, in true rhetorical Latin taste. There is a flerce contempt in his murale ran of Majosty and a curious sinister dread in the reference to virtue with her grim, boly face. But we should search in vain for the epigram matic wisdom of Juvenal in his shortlived disciple. Oldham did not care enough for truth, for one thing, nor perhaps, was his flery temperament sufficiently philosophic. It was not through ange reflection, not through fancy or delicacy that he gained his reputation, but by means of a savage vigour and intensity of passion which could make oven his melodramatic creations live. Further a real artistic feeling, not borrowed from his master Juvenal is shown in the internal coherence of each satire and in the omission of trivialities, for which his tendency to generalisation was, in part, responsible. Bosides, although, no doubt, he looked on the plot ranks as a splendid opportunity for his peculiar talent, there is a real sincerity and magnanimity in his attitude, which disdains petty scandal and personal abuse. In this way in his satires, he avoids both the monthing scurrility of Marston, who had earlier attempted a ratiric indignation, and, also, to an unusual degree, the character istic obscenity of the restoration era.

The remaining works of Oldham consist of some original poems, some translations and two prose pieces. The last have little interest. One, The Character of an Uply Old Pract consists of dreary abuse of some unknown purson it belongs to a species of Political and Ecclesiastic., vatire writing which had some rooms at the time, and, perhaps, aped, in string which had come rooms at the time, and perhaps about in most be prose, nutters and their many and their many on a man to procupoed a fallere. The other A Sunday Thought in Steiners, prosocioco a sautare. Ano utom a commungative su communa is an unimprossive religious composition, of which the most striking has an unimpressive rengions componison or which the most striking passage seems influenced by the final speech in Marlows a Frantist. passage scens innested by the man speech in markows a current Nevertheless, it would not be difficult to believe that the solliopty recently a personal experience is a sufficiently toos, in lace, represent a personal experience is a summernly material and matter-of-fact. We know from one of his parate natural and matter-or-sack tre snow from one or me private letters that, at one time, he had led a rakish life, but that oxportence and thinking had made him quit that humour As experience and minimizes and made and quit that minimar and to his verse, only one lyric possesses any attractiveness. The Coreto an verse, only one time possesses any antaunreness, the currence (see Good Fellow, a really jorial toper's song, which raises the cas troog remos, a reasy jornal uppers song, which cause the suspection that some other ballads ought to be ascribed to its suspecion that some other using origin to the seconds to the same of contemporary anonymous work. A successing Poetry to which Spenner's ghost furnishes a ough concerning receive to whith openiors gives luminous a climity successcent, gives a metancholy description of the lot of professional poets under Charles II but it lacks the spirit of the processors press moser circuits and own its interest to its account of Buller's latter days. Far more important is A Sutyr address' d to nature a latter units. Far more important in a carry mattreas as a Priceed that is about to loose the University for it is the most a rytona seas is about to some one University for it is the mean mature or visuam a possible professions of a scholar in review nument the passes the possible professions of a second in review there best Greek and Latin for your time is accommanding— were constitute and Laun for your life—but, in brief, it is an underpaid drudgery. Then, a chapladory ite —out, in prior, it is an autorpain arrangery thou, a majorancy is a slarmy of the most humiliating kind. Sir Crape is an upperas statery or see more magnificant and who must buy the benefice servain who has occur communication, and who must only the communication him for seven years thrull by marrying the superannated green num nor sorten jours unan ny mantying ure supersonant mailing-maid. Freedom at any price is to be preferred but wating-mail. Processor as any perce is so so preserved too.

Oldham a saydration, as a poet, at least, is a small catalo, where, in Outment a appraisance, as a prop at reast, in a second cutano, where the reddences is no could enjoy a few choice books and fewer friends.

88

The translations have considerable morit. They are by no The translations have considerable ment. They are by so means sayile, and bear obvious fraces of the author's own life. near sorting and one outside traces of the salaries out one and the Passion of Byblis from Orid has the coarse rigour of his and caston of experience with over the course theory or an early work. The Thirteenth Satyr of Japanese is not experience to an early work. carry wax. And accesses occupy of several a moreovery true the characteristic way in which the note is forced. The lighter the commence where we will be supported to the original are abbreviated, the glomy are atpanded. portions of the others are successive, the grown are capacitate.

The sully horrors of the timer impressive in the Latin are the gumy ourcors or the amor impressive in the basis, are tricked out with details of rulear fancy and bosome incredible. Discass our wise course or rough laney and occurse missauron and Bollean's Satire loucking Nobility are interpolated the Do you apply your belowed aright

Neither these versions nor others resembling them can be called inadequate, but their chief importance lies in the fact that, in part, they are adaptations only. The scene is transferred to London wherever possible. Pordage takes the place of Codrus in Juvenal's Third Satirs, the Popish plot and its political sequels are inserted into Horace's famous description of the bore. As in so much else, so in this fashion, deliberately adopted by Oldham', he was the forerunner of greater men. Pope was to bring the adaptation of classic satires to contemporary circumstances to its perfection in England. And the whole department of generalizing satire, in which the persons attacked, if they are roal at all, are of secondary interest, and where the actual course of events and historic fact are thrust saids for the purpose of artistic unity and unadulterated gloom, finds its first worthy exponent in Oldham. Dryden, indeed, who nobly colebrated his young rival's genius. maintained his own independence, and, by transforming the narrative satire of Marvell, created a separate stream of poetry But, if we tell over the small forgotten satires of the later seven teenth century, we find the lesser poet's influence extending over a considerable number of them. It is true that they were a ranged trein.

Yet, poor stuff as these compositions might be, they exercised an undoubted influence on the events they filtestrate. They were written chiefly, it would seem, for the coffee-house haunter. One Julian, a man of infamous reputation and himself a libeller would make a stealthy round of those establishments and distribute the surreptitious sheets, the more dangerous libels could only be dropped in the streets by porters, to be taken up by chance passers-by. Not merely was the public made intensety eager for pamphets and squits of all kinds in the electric political atmosphere of the last twenty years of the seventeenth century but, in 1079 the Licensing act, under which anti-potenmental publications were restrained, expired for a time. Although a decision of the judges soon gave the crown as complete powers of suppressing mwelcome books and pamphlets as before, the previous Renating of the limitation of the number previous Renating of the number of suppressing measurements.

a C. his advertisement to Pecus and Translations (cd. 1886). This is justification to see Irratalism of Herman J. 2000 integlied was the affected by petiting Harman late a more season from than thiberto be has appeared by; that is, by realist nepath as if the very bring and writing now. I therefore resolved to about the speak as if the very bring and writing now. I therefore resolved to about the speak from Beans to London, and to make see of Errichs names of man, places and consess, where the purallel would decestly permit, which I economied would give a kind of new after the power, and tracket in more appreciable to the reliab of the swearch see.

of marter printers lapsod. The consequences of even a partial or marter printers inspect. The consequences of even a partial minimaling of the press were almost immediately seen in a swarm numeriting of the press sere amount immediators seen in a second of libels, of which a vigorous complaint was made by Mr Junice of mosts, or which a vigorous companies was made by our survey of the love any Age, I think, more licensome in 10/10 Americ was never any Age, A mins, more necessary than this, in aspersing Governors, scattering of Libes, and tous train tons, in aspersing vorumors, scattering or taken, and acandalous Speeches against those that are in authority! And acanomious operations against more than are in authority and the fudge is confirmed by a ballad, The Licentoniness of the Times, in the same your

Mow each man writes what seems good in the cyse, And tells in held rhymer the investment as an ex-

The Licensing act was renewed in 1686 but, apparently without much effect. The incompager of the press could have his eyes darsled, i.e could be bribed not to inform the higher authorities of a soditions publication, and it was easy to disperse copies. Thus, or a sourcous prominance, and it was easy to emperate copies. Thus, when the act empired for good and all, in 1605 little real change when the ciral gation of the scandalone tracts with which we are concerned.

countroeu. The output of popular satire was more vitally affected by changes The output of popular saure was more strain success of transport in public feeling. After a prelude of compositions on the Popular in printe feeting. After a factories of comparisons on the types plot, poems and balleds come thick and fast during the agitation prot, poems and unious come union and uses coming one agreement for and against the Exclusion bill, which was to deprive James, dake of York of the succession and bring in king Mommonth. oute or their or the succession and being in any entounement.

A series of triumphant tory productions stulk over Shaftesbury. A series of tetumpeans may reconcerness exacts over constituently and the other whig leaders in the time of the Rye-home plot and of the contemporary combands against conhecustom. These succeeds sao gormunicate a campangu agames curpanistima. Autro successos a iail, although Mommeth's rebellion, in 1665 was the occasion a renowed outburst. But the accord period of astiric pamphlets or a renewed outcomes out the account porton or sentite paragramme dates from the beginning of James 11's impopularity about the takes from the beginning of values are unpopularity accurs see year 1697 and reaches its fover-heat in the years of revolution. Jour 1007, and reactions he reterment in the lower or resonance, after which a subsidence of active activity begins, until a loss perferred time drawn near with the peace of Ryasick. The active which draw their implication, such as it was from

Ann motion waters upon under improved some as a was, now, proposed, oldham and Marrell, were, for the most part, written in the berole couples, although a Hudilrastic metre appears now and the nerves could are some semilyric exceptions hard to classify By their nature, they were almost all jublished anonymously and ny mer name, mey were summes an parameter samujurously and the rell was seldom raised later oran when the bulk of them were are you was secured taken and such even when we water or come were reprinted in such collections as the rations volumes entitled Poems

¹ The Lord Chief Junior Ecropy his Spenk to the Flags June 1 1775. Great States Section Sec The Lord Chief Junior Keepige his Speech in the Kleef Breach 1879, Owner Speech on the Action Respective points are positive spatial spatial for the General Action and Friday Junior, p. 7 (Bl. Thomas Jacon has been seened from Junior Breach at the Chief Junior, and owner from the speech of the Chief Junior, and owner from the Chief Junior, and the Chief Junior and the Chief Junior and Chief Junior

on Affairs of State. When an authors name was affixed by the transcribers, it was, very possibly, specryphal. Some poems written subsequently to Marvell's death were put down to him, and on principle, Rochester was debited with the most obscene. Then, certain names are furnished by the publishers of Poems on Affairs of State on the title-pages of that collection. We are told that the duke of Buckingham, lord Buckhurst (later, carl of Dorset) Sir Fleetwood Shepperd, Sprat, Drake, Gould, Brady and Shadwell were responsible for some of the contents but the attribution of the individual pieces is rarely given, nor do the anthors names, of inferior importance as they mostly are, give many clues in the way of style. In fact, the greater number of the remiar satires might be sacribed to two authors-distinguishable from each other as writing, the one reasonably well, and the other yeary budly Dryden is imitated almost invariably in the metre. Oldham frequently and Marvell not seldom in the contents, and there is little else left by which to judge. A single type is dominant.

A better classification than that by authors is provided in these poems by their method of treatment and their themes. There were employed in them a restricted number of backnered forms which were often fixed by the more important poets. Cloireland had invented the railing character of a political opponent. Denham and Marvell had brought in the come of a satiric rimed chronicle. and to Marvell is due the variation of a visionary dislocue. Oldham revived the related ghostly monologue, the spiirle last will1 and direct general invective. Dryden was the author o. a kind of epic. derived from the satiric chronicle, but no longer dependent on the news of the day, and presenting its invective in the form of characters drawn with consummate ability. By the imitators of these writers, the dominant forms of satire enumerated were adonted in a more or less alavish manner together with other genres, and it is not difficult to select examples from the best defined groups. There were written during the period over twenty Advices to a Active or poems with kindred themes. For instance, one Neso Adrice written in 1079 contains a grim attack on the whige and nonconformists after archbishop Sharps murder. It has no mean dramatic power, and is in strong contrast to the historic and argumentative Good Old Cause Recreed of a few months later Aor did the trick tire till the close of the century. A nobler form, that of Biblical marrative, also had its misusers. Pordage, a by word for Grub-sirect poverty wrote the tame, but not abusive,

CL WALES, PR. 487 E.

Azuria and Hushai, in 1882, while Settle, in his Absalom Sentor a more echo of Dryden, among much possense has, here and there, good lines, such as To what strange rage is Supersition drives,

That Han can outdo Hell to fight for Reaves.

Brady produced an obscene Grant's War about the same time, and the change to a chancal subject is also seen in Torques and the course of a case of the stack of William III and his queen A most effective weepon for decrying opponents was the

A most enocate weaken for new new opposition was no character which, indeed, formed an essential part of the Biblical currector water, induced, formed an executar part or the minutes. One of the wittlest was written by the dake of Bucking narrestre. Vino ut suo rissone vas viissen vy suo unao us sourana. ham, in his Adrese is a Painter against his rival Arlington one man, in the nature to a counter against the tital arthuston one of the lottlest is Shaftenbery's Farcord, a kind of infinited epitaph or the volumes is consumonary a correct, a sinu or instinct epicapar on the whig loader's death in Holland (What I A republic air and on the wing tender a death in thousand () that a reproduct at several points a grave (). Shadwell has the diagrace of unsurpassed resultance in his Modal of John Bayes (1682), which drew upon him a peak hungament tom the doodpin triend spom be punboosed. a conty pennament from the quotasm intent which he improved the most cutting, perhaps, was the sham Panegyra on King are most cutting, permaja, was the smann rangement on any William by the hon J Hioward J. Nor should The Man of so Neuman of the non-1 information from mount in stan of no Honour where James II s subservient courtiers are smalled, be forgotten. An argumentative style is to be discerned in the description of the views of The Importal Transcr which, in fact, onemplates or they be a supporting attender which in act, in a while manifesto of 1032, and where real knowledge and a is a wing manufactor of 1002, and where you arrow to you are weighty personality seem to transpire. Thus, the gap is bridged weapnty personality seem so transpore. Thus, the gap is crucked to the unaddifferented argument which is to be found in the earlier to the minimum and a segment which as to be round in the carrier for Poem on the Right of Successors or in Pordage a spirition attack on persecution, The Medal Revert'd (1632).

Acce of personality are accuss access to the visions and ghosts Address in the Control of the Court The Battle Hoyal (1887) is a nonconformist burlosque of paper and parson. topu (1007) is a noncommunities outrowios to paper and parson.

The Fracing Vision (1631) contains a dialogue in Oldham s The states states (1991) contains a changue in Contains a manage between Shafterbury and Monnouth A. inquantum manner possetti chanceroury and authoritica a loquadom phantom appears in most of the type. Thus, in fit-Edwardony Godfrey's Chost, written about 1679 by some whig. whose gift of sardonic wit makes in curious to know his name, whose gas to made to appear to Charles II. Humour on the other too goest a mano to appear to course at. Itimoor on the ounce thank, is the special talent of the tory who wrote Tom Thyrace. mand, in the special latent or the tory was whole 1000 1 styrace.

(Short in Hudibrastic metre (1663). Hell, at any rate, is under a despot, and the dead whigh have no scope for their energies, Les none per personne bank douglette

Or makes andstiful segmentions

Charles II himself was called on for ghostly comment after his death. The angry tory who wrote Caesar's Ghost (c 1687) begins quite well and impressively with the rise of the royal shade from the tomb, but talls off into the usual sourcilities, this time signist the officers of James II's army at Hounslow heath. The Chost of Kung Charles II (1 c 1609) also gives advice, written, possibly by some diagnated whig, to "the penaire prince, not given to replies. William III.

From the ghost to the last will is a natural transition, but, whereas the ghost is almost always tragic, and with good reason, too, according to the authors, the will is sprightly and squiblike, if rather hideous, in its fun. The best, perhaps, is the attack on Bhaftesbury in exile, The Loat Will and Testument of Anthony K of Poland (1689). The legacies, some of which are heartlessly enough invented, sotirise the legateses as well as the great whig leader himself, and there is no denying the stinging wit of the whole.

Next to these sham dramatic poems we may notice the dialogues, of which Marrell's Dialogue between two Horses (1675) is justily celebrated. The witty humour of the place blends well with an only too serious political indictment of Charles and his brother and we may excure the degrerel lilting metre as an echo of the cirmy canter of his brans and marble horses. Rochester, too, wrote a short dialogue, The Duputs, on the dake of York's conversion to Catholicism, which contains his accustomed rankling sting. Coriosaly enough, there is a satire or two, conduting of alternate recriminations between the duchess of Portsmouth and hell Geynn (1682), conducted much to the advantage of the English and 'protestant mistress but, in this species, the palm should be assigned to the octosyllable Dulloyus between James II and his Italian oncern, which is replete with vulgar humony

Scarcely to be distinguished from the dialogues is the fill defined class of squibs. Their metres are varied. Some are lyric in character and form a link between compositions intended for reading and ballads intended for singing some are in octosyllable lines of a Hudibrastic kind. Indeed, although they go maturally together it is hard to give a reason for thus grouping them, except that invective and indignation are markedly subordinate in them to the with to ridicule and scoff. 'Eminent hand, as the booksellers would have said, were engaged in their production. Marvell unde a striking success of the spirited belied quatrains of his Iven on the State on Stacks-starket (1072). Tackly stance contains a separate conceit on the offering of a wealth

Political and Ecclesiastical Sattre 94

Londoner to Charles II, a statue of Sobicald (of all people) being Londoner to Charles 11, a statute or countest (or an people) using altered for the purpose to sails Charles a features. As annal with altered for the purpose to some constraint as a usual wind Marrell, the chief political griorances of the day are catalogued, MATTER, the cines position grows on the day are causing we, the prevailing tone of the indictment is one of witty pleasantry cur the prevaining tone or the inductional is one or with presented. The History of Issipuds (1670), which is the least revolting And History O Institute (1870), which is the felial retraining the efficient said to have led to bis benishment from court. among the enterious said to make too to the communicate from court-its cold and effective malice was, at least, dangerous enough to the cost and emocure manico was, as seas, configurous coverage we come some royal displacature. Later be displayed the same mordant wit against the white in the chigrammatic Commons, morousit wit against the wings in the epigrammatic commonst.

Petition to the King (1879). Still better as a work of art, and not so envenmed in substance, is the lampoon On the Found States so enveroused in substance, is the sampoon of the lower content of the chief, who were Charles II's chief sacrificery, outcompane, one came, who were considered the close of his reign. If not by Dryden, as the advances at the cose of his regge. If not by Daymen, as the publishers claimed, the polish of this signily access to indicate pausacers cames, une pouse or one square scene to moreove Rochester grown ripe. Two octoryllable pieces also demand notice, one, On the Duckers of Portsmooth's Picture (1889), for its wrathful pungency the other a parody of King James's Declaration to pengency one other a parroay of hirsy values a rectaration (1692), by Sir Floetwood Sheppard, for its tolerant victorious though by our reconstruct comprises, for as tolerant recorsons humour. Lastly comes a group of poems in three-lined single-rimed number that you pocularly suitable for scattering argument against the ments was promisely automoral someonium argument or a string of accusations, and some excellent talent went to their or a suring or accusations, and some executions carries were some production. Instances of their effective employment may be seen in The Melancholy Complaint of Dr. Titus Oales, and in The m the magnessy companies of the time value, and in the Parliament dissolved at Oxford (1681), a pointed, if immetrical, production.

Along with literary satires, attempts, in this nature, of the Along with their symmetry and personal in the menter of the somewhat Thomas Otray may be ranked. Their form is somewhat unusual, and, in consequence, they do not early fall into any of the groups distinguished above. The earlier is a Findaric edg. The Poet's Complaint to his Mine, written when, in 1679 the duke For a companies to an arrange written when, in 1010 the unanof York was bankshed, in consequence of the agitation about the or rore was training, in coancilucore or toe agration accourate Poplai plot. Very long, hyperbolical, straggling and unmelodious. to compared is not an attractive piece of writing but the name or companies as not an authorized process writing out the nature same of its author and the furious attack on the potent. Libell, who, of or the authors and the running arthur on the potent Lauren, who, or course, is a whig authrat only lead it interest. Otway's later course, or a wing matrix only some is mineral. Usway's mier matric effort, the comic section in Festics Preserved (1688), where securic cours, one comme access in 1 cases a face one (1000), where a face of the facility only shows to what doubts of ineptitude be could descend of the power to caricature he scores devoid.

mas uerona.

Otway in his Complaint, mentions the kinds of poetry that

'Libell was proficient in, 'Painters Advices, Letanics, Ballada. The first of these represent the would be literary work intended for reading. The other two species, which had been, earlier, employed in mockery of the rolling puritans, were the property of the bellad monger, and were hawked about the country to be chanted at street-corners and in taverus. Their manner is, therefore, far more popular than that of the semi literary satires. In scurrillty, indeed, there is little to choose between them. If snything the ballade have a poorer vocabulary and hurl a few customary enithets from Billingagate at their opponents with a smaller amount of detailed obscenity than opportunities of the heroic complet allow But their strokes of criticism are mainly more coarsely done and not so strongly bitten in their humour is more rollicking and clownish their occasional argumentation more rough and ready and, in it, the ruin of trade, due, of course, to the wicked white or tories as the case might be finds an additional prominence.

Since they were intended for popular recitation and for an immediate effect, it was necessary that they should be readily sung, and this end was attained by fitting them to tunes which were already well known and popular. This was not very difficult to achieve. A certain number of ballad tunes were old favourities throughout the country, and the more successful operas or plars of Clarles II's reign frequently left behind them some air or other which caught the general fancy and was sung everywhere. Both these sources were put under contribution by ballad-makers, and it was only rarely that a new tune had to be expressly composed for a ballad, and, being composed, was admitted into the singers rejections. The consequence was that a favour of parody pervaded almost all the political ballads of the day. It was tempting to adopt words and phrases together with the time and there resulted, for instance, a whimsteal contrast between Hafi to the knight of the post, directed against Titus Oates, and Hall to the myrtle shades which began the original ballad.

Among builted tunes, the history stands in the front rank. With its three riming lines and short refrain, it was in fact, the most successful variation of the three lined sathric rerse. Its name was taken from its original refrain Which nobody can deny which was often superseded, especially when the attack was most bitter by the litan) prayers Libera nos, Domine, Quaetomus te, Domine, or their English equiralents. A hortatory, and less implacable, sattre, which came into voyse in the later days of Charles, altered the refrain again to This is the Time. They were mainly, however the retrain again to them is the time. They were mainly, unwerer same to the one time, although The Cavallity Man, a cavaller ang to the one time, amongs was consumy arm, a cassurer as occasionally used, when the lift of the three lines and their arr was occasionary used, when we are on second by one status of the tory Loyal Subject's Litary (1680) From the Dark Lanthorn Prot, and the Green-Richon Only from brewing sedition is a superified Tab; From reforming a Prince by the model of Job,

The other bullad times may be conveniently divided into old and are using the first class, two were much more popular than their ton VI the miss come and acre much more popular than more congeners. Packtaptons Pound was a lifting tone, fitted for a oragoners. Fucus sprons a round was a mining sum, muco not a cheme of words not unlike parts of The Impolably Legends, and a ready rehicle for broad and dashing fun. Its copies continued ready remote for talent and traceing and the segme of the best balled mentation the thought of the more cally as it admitted some mures were wristen in the term. Almost equal to annut remaining of according to the remaining of the programme of the prog Toronyona a round in general invest was step cope by the accompanied an eight-lined status of vigorous or rorny-one. This accompanies an eight-times scanes or rigorous moreosent, octosyllable and bezasyllable lines being alternated. The eighth line was usually the refrain, such as Hey boys, up the eigen contrary way or some special one for the go we; or two cross commany way or some species were on me we occasion but is might remain unmanagement from the rest to the old times only need a mention there were med, for rece, vener our sums only most a mention state rest week for Education, Esphily ciph, Good Lawrel, Chang chong Portune, our symmetry sequences control control of the Jolly Bayyars, I'll tell thes, Drek and Phillida Routs me, all of which date from before the

Tom D'Urfey appears to have been the most popular ballad-And I where supports to make been see more popular beams.

These of his like Saterney will Re'er be my love again, Now the fight's done, Hark, the think ring near on my tore opens, from the papers across states we common roar and Burton Hall, were at once made part of the cases a root and a series at the series at the other competitors and an Digoy's Forescal, Ressell's Forescal, How subscripts in Phyllis as reverse a currency masses a currency rive assumpts a resource as a corp political time. Note yet Tories that play All those, however are outdone in importance by Parcell's Lellibertoro, which conferred an instant and extraordinary success on Thomas lord Wherton s doggered rimes, and Tag of course, employed for still poorer efficients after Tarde. Here, was continued anniversaries mark of the balled's effectiveness, and as tested the miles and another to appear of the period and another tested and another street of the period and another street. 1 Chappel, W Oil Robbil Power States at Woodstiege, 1803, vol. 11, p. 53, and
1 Chappel, W Oil Robbil Power States at Woodstiege, 1803, vol. 12, p. 53, and

With regard to most ballads, however, we are left in the dark as to their anthorship. Who was the reasoning tory humourist who wrote the first two parts of A Narrative of the Popul Plot (1679-80), or the lady of quality who continued his work ! What whig wrote the wrathful Tories Confession (1682), the disgusted Satur on Old Rowley (1690-1), or the scornful Lamentable Lory (1684 f) (against Laurence Hyde), or the drily humorous Sir T Jenner & Speech to his Wife and Children (1688-9)? Nocie premuniur And along with the writers of these are forgotten their tory antagonists, the authors of the gay invective of A New Presbyterian Ballad (1681), or the flory Dagon's Fall (1682) against Shaftesbury the exulting Tories' Triumph (1685) or the witty lampoon on bishop Burnet, The Braumy Bishop & Complaint (c. 1698). Let the names of the ballad-makers, even when known, are rather disappointing. It was Charles Blount, the delst, who is responsible for the clever and haughty Sale of Esaus Birthright on the Buckingham election of 1679. William Wharton, a son of Philip, fourth lord Wharton, although reputed dull, was the author of A New Song of the Times (1683), one of the most brilliant of whig squibs. Walter Pope, a physician and astronomer wrote The Catholic Ballad (1674), which displays replai pleasantry Another physician, Archibald Pitcairne, translated and improved the Jacobite De Juramento illiesto (1689). The protestant Johner Stephen College, perpetrated some yapping pasquinades. And we find some professionals. There was Thomas Jordan, the city poet, who shows a fine lyrical feeling in The Plotting Paperts Latany (1680), which stands quite apart in structure from the Which nobody can deny series. His successor as city poet, Matthew Taubman, edited a volume of tory compositions, of some of which he was presumably author Finally the courtier song writer and dramatist, Tom D'Urfer composed several tory songs, all of them facile and tuneful, and one, The Trimmer (c. 1690), sardonically witty D'Urfey furnishes us with a sidelight on the audience of these ballade, when he tells how he sang one, in 1682, with King Charles at Windsor he holding one part of the paper with me. On one side or another, they appealed to all the nation, and their comparative popularity was the best gauge of public opinion.

But there were good reasons for the anonymity of this political intersture, poems, boileds and tracts. If the censorship had lapsed or was inefficient, the law of libel gave the government ample means for punishing the publishers and authors of snything tending to civil division, and, naturally while the whigh had most present reason to fear the tories did not forget the possibility of a turn of removed to rower one correst one may sorget the pressuring of a time of the wheel. The last four years of Charles II may a number of too where, and sees now yours to construct at seaw a number to prosecutions of booksellers like Nathaniel Thompson, Richard proscutions or occasioners has resonance intemperat, memory Boulamin Harris and others, and, although those cases do sammer pechanic marm and outers, and according toose cases us not seem to have been very efficient deterrents, they tended to make anonymity advisable as an obvious and easy procession.

Moanwhile, a struggling and feether race of prose satires existed inder the apadest of the booms and pallads. Its combatatively mice and selected control and the control control of the control sound the state of the process and contains the comprehensive scanty numbers and its weakly condition were, may be, due to the earny numbers and is wearny condition were, may be, one to toe fact that proce satire could not be discottangled without difficulty not true processarire cours not on concurants on without transverse from sober argument. The seventeenth centary pamphileteer kept no noun solver argument. The seventeening rentury pampulation reprint forms with his political or occlesiastical adversaries. His reasoning terms run ma journess or occaremental surcrearies. The researing is intertarded with invective, and if possible, with ridicale. Yet is magnature with invective, and, it possible, with nuclear ter-the serious content of his tract may remain obvious, and a few traits of satire are not sufficient to change its classification. In tracing the course of pure satire, therefore, we are left mostly to a stacing size course or pure saure, increase, we are interested assembled, the authors of which, it would seem series of secretaries imminutes are amounted a surely in a community and distribution of their argumentative powers and distribution to employ the more popular device of rime.

One amphibious contribution The Released Transproved One amputesom controution, the decrees mention on its satirfo (10/x-5) or anorres marrent measures measured on the region of aspect amongst controvery its author's design of discrediting his opponent by ridicule and continuely is too apparent throughout for is to be avaladed from satira. As such, it possesses undentable morite. Marrell understood the difficult art of bankering the enemy He rakes up Parker's part history sometimes with a subdued to make up cashers pass manuff scanoning when a second fun-as when he says that his victim, in his puritan youth, was such as when no says that his porridge than the other fasting Grewellers - sometimes with a more strident invective. He can tioneurs annual and a more arrows in court of the to a fine indignation when he describes Parker s ingratitude to Amilion. And there is a shrowthese in his himour which brings over annous and since as a convenience in ms manuser wines or may were the reader to his side. Yet, with all this, the wit of his book is the elder carilling wit of the chop-logic kind. It is a succession of quips, which need a genius not possessed by Marrell to keep their sarour amidat a later generation. That he had high powers in humorous comedy was shown in his paredy of Charles II, His Majorty : Most Gracious Speech to Both House of Parliament Augusty 2 as on Urtusous opacos to 1900 1100 and 40 1100 and 1676). Its andactons mockery and satirio grasp of a situation preserve its fun from evaporating, and exhibit a dramatic faculty we harely expect in the musing poet of The Garden.

I Graves or greature, a fairly sectations or judes. The word is absorbly commented to the property of the prop

A favourite form of proce, as of poetic, entire was the narrative. Cabela (1863) is a fine example. Here, we are given delightful sham minutes of meetings held by the leading noncomformists in 1862. Sardonio and malleious as it is, it includes burlesque of great talent, as when the 'well-affected' minister is described as one 'who indeed complieth with the public injunction of the Church, yet professeth they are a burthen and a grief to him. It has a distinct affinity with a much later composition, which, how ever, is by a whig and directed against the Jacobites, A true and ampartial Narrative of the Dissenter' New Plot (1890), where the extreme high church view of English history alone the reformation is parcelled in a brilliant, unscrupplous fashion. The gay triumplant irony and solemn banter of the piece only set off to better advantage the serious argument which is implied and, at last, caroscally stated.

The Late of goods for sale is a very alight thing commanded to the serious argument which is implied and, at last, carnestly stated.

The Let of goods for sale is a very slight thing compared to elaborate productions like the above, but it gave opportunity for skilful thrusts and lasted throughout the period. Books were the objects most frequently described, but other items appear as in the Advertuement of a Sale of choice Goods, which dates from about 1670. One lot constitut of Two rich Royal Camlet Clokes, faced with the Protestant Religion, very little the worse for wearing, valued at 41 to advance half a Crown at each bidding which must have annued Charles II if not his brother annued Charles II if not his brother annued Charles II if not his brother.

The dialogue was a favourite form for polemic in the party newspapers. It appears in A Pleasant Battle between two Lop-dogs of the Utopana Coart (1631), where hell Gwynns dog, following the example of his mistress, whis the day against the duchess of Portsmonths. So, too, there are several clisarcters, like that written by Otham, but none worth special notice, save that the ralling style gives place to a more polished invective. Another form, the parable, was in favour under William III. It was a kind of prolonged fable, where personages of the day appear as various birds and beasts. Thus, in the nonconformix whig Parable of the Three Jackdaws (1690), which perhaps, is identical with that of The Magnes by Bradahaw! the cagle stands for Charles II the falcon for Monmouth, archibishop Saneroft is called a 'metropolitical Magnye and the discenters are styled 'blackbirds and nightingales.

Along with these distinct genres there were printed some satires (Ct. Davies,)., The Life and Errors of J. D. vol. 1, p. 121.

Political and Ecclesiastical Satire

hard to classify pretended documents, sham letters and so forth. naru to cassary prosension uncurarents, assum returns and so rura.

The Humble Address of the Atheists (1688) to James II a while concoction, is superior to most of its fellows, although it has but connected, as superior to meas or its innives, amongs it mas one seanty merit. Some way below it rank the mock while Letter from Amsterdam to a Friend in England (1678) and Father La Chaise's Project for the Estirpation of Heretics (1888), in which the opponents of the two factions decorated what they imagined were the designs of while or papiet with products of a lurid fancy

When we try to sum up the improviou which these antires, in rerse or prose, give us, we are struck at once by the low place m reaso or press, kits as, we say strong as once of site for peace which they hold as literature. Withy they often are, and with a wit which improves. We change from flouts and joers and artificial quips to humorous sarroum, which owes its effect to the contrast of the notions expressed and to its ruthless precision. But even this is not a very clear advance the quip had, perhaps, Due or ou time is the a root under sevence and query many postages, always been a little popular form, and mere Jeering continued to anaya occu a muso popular torm, and more Journal communication the staple active. In fact, except Oldham, who stands apart, to use surpre minister in many carecys vicinians, and manage spans, those authors did not aim at a literary mark. They were the access among our now are an a morary man a more and askirmlahers of a political warfare, bandying darts all the more astronuces of a position variance, consumer that most would nike their billet. Many of them were hirelings with little interest in ther outer they exponsed. Their virulence, which seems nowakays hideous, was mainly professional and the lewd abuse which fills amount was manny processors and the come some waren ma public. It was not a compassionate age. The very danger of the libeliers trade under the censorably made him the more un memor a rane under the conserming manic min and more on acropulous in his choice of means. The tories, as a matter of course, harp continually on Shafterbury's ulcer the result of a carriage accident, and the effect tap which drained it was the source of continual nicknames and scottle and the white are equal sincers. A debanched riot reigns in most of the poetical satires, degraded into an absolute passion for the purplent and the ugly The writers of them, it would appear worshipped and lored unimalism for its own sake, not the least when they searched brough every depth of evil in order to defame their adversaries in

CHAPTER IV

THE BARLY QUAKERS

The rise of the quaker movement in England, which began with the public preaching of George Fox, just about the time of the execution of Charles I, was marked by a surprising cutburst of literary activity. The new conception of religion was propagated with extraordinary send, and seemed likely at one time not only to change the face of English Christianity but to mould, after the quaker pattern, the religious life of the American colonies. It was essentially the rediscovery, by men and women whose whole training and environment were puritan, of the mystical element which lies close to the heart of Christianity but which puritanism, with all its strength, had strangely missed. It was a revisited consciousness of God, brinches with it the conviction that the essence of Christs railgion is not to be found in submission to outward authority, whether of church or of Bible, but in a direct experience of God in the soul, and in a life lived in obedience to His will inwardly revealed.

The overmastering enthusiasum kindled by the new experience,

The overmastering enthusiasm kindled by the new experience, due, as Fox and his followers believed, to the immediate inspiration of the Holly Spirit, impelled them to make it known by pen as well as voice. Rude countrymen from the fells of Westmorland, as well as scholars with a university training—even boys like James Parnell who died a marter in Colchester cauthe at the acceptance and the second of the of nineteen—became prolific writers as well as ferrent preachers of mystical experience and practical righteousness. Books and pumplied, broadsheets and public letters, followed one another in rapid succession, setting forth the new way of life, defending it against its adversaries, and plending for liberty of conscience and of worship. The organisation by which they contrived to get so large a mass of writing into circulation is not yet fally understood: large a mass or writing into circulation is not yet outy minutes soon. But the fact that they found readers affords noteworthy evidence of the ferment of mens minds in that day and of the dominance over their thoughts and lives of the religious interest.

of all this rast output, there is not much that could possibly or an emission of the control of the by its intrinsic quanties, and any permanent peace in requisi-liferature its chief interest now is for the curious student of negative its cone interest to a said to have influenced in any appreciable degree the intellectual outlook of English speaking approcusoes segree the intersection outdook or communications in propers, except in so are as it was one of the minution factors in the evolution of religious thought from the hard dogmation of nortan days to a more liberal and ethical interpretation of parising case to a more uncertainty desired and crimeal interpretation of Christianity. Most of the early quaker writings, having served their temporary purpose, were read, so far as they continued to be used at all, by the adherents of the new conception of religious life, and by few or none boulde.

han by ten us more reason.

That is only what would naturally be expected, when we look that is only west would maintain to expected, when we now at the forces that gave birth to these writings and at the conas the recent was gave or at the core writings and as the con-ditions under which they were poured forth. The purpose of these curious under which they were poured form. The purpose of tacses anthors was not intellectual, and not (primarily at nemerous summers was not intercental, and not invariantly at reasy accompany our experimental. Anny ice an invario com-pulsion to make known to the world what God had done for Pussion to make known to see worm what two uses used them, that they might draw others into the same experience, and term, that took might draw others into the same experience, and into the kind of life to which it led. Moreover, the sense of into the and or the to winter to sent and covered the sense of direct Divine communion and guidance, in which they lived, found correction in terms that too often seemed to deny to the Coristian any place for the artistic faculty and even for the development of the intellectual powers. In striving to set forth what ment of the intersection powers, in surring to see forth what they had discovered, they used, without transcending it, the trey may inscribed, they may attitude transcepting it, the philosophical dualism of their day which divided the world of paramophana manner or most car when arrives we were consumered the metern and the experience into water ages comparisons, the natural and the Dirine. The terminology of the securious the answer and the farmer the securious of the serements contary even in a server was exceed to see into the religions of accuracy works over the spirit. The conception to use it to expound their reugion or toe clarit. The Conseptate of the Divide immanence, in the light of which alone they could or any arrange minimuscoco, in une nigur or wince acome uney como have found adequate expression for their experience, had been mys ment ancurate expression for mear expensions and new well-nigh lost. The Power which they felt working within them

The bishop of the Quaker Francis Landau has yel to be written. How did the South of Friends, who had no expension below with the Company of Bellinger, the field the contract of source and source below the first of the Company of Bellinger, Domey or I france, who had no comparation whetever with the Company of Matthews, manage to prove as many bends in defined of their principles Groups of Matthews, I are a made haven. After Edward, 1984—1709 (1909), we made haven. After Edward, predicts to the

was set forth by them in language representing it as wholly transcendental. It was only (they believed) when the creature and all his works were laid in the dust that the light of the Creator could alube undimmed within their souls. In the quakers, as often in other mystics, the ascetic impulse, which a dualistic theory has usually aroused in the minds of those who take religion seriously tended to aesthetic and intellectual poverty. Hence, it is only a few of these multitudinous works that, rising above the general level, either in thought or style, deserve attention in a history of English literature.

The most characteristic form into which the literary impulse of the mystic has thrown itself, from Augustine's Confessions to Madame Guyon, is that of the attempt to 'testify to the workings of God in his soul. And in no group of mystics has that impulse found more general expression than in the early quakers. Their Journals, though written without pretentions to literary art, maintain a high level of sincere and often paire self portraiture, and the best of them contain a rich store of material for the student of the 'varieties of religious experience. But they are seldom unhealthily introspective they contain moving accounts of persecution and suffering, borne with unfilmching fortitude, in obedience to what it was believed the will of God required, of passive resistance to injustice and oppression, recounted often with humour and rarely with bitterness of adventures by land and sea, in which the guiding hand and providential arm of God are magnified. The quaint individuality of these men and women is seldom lost, though the stamp of their leader Fox is upon them. and their inward experiences clothe themselves in the forms of expression which he first chose, and which soon became current coin in the body which he founded. 'I was moved of the Lord to go here and there weighty exercise came upon me 'mr mind was retired to the Lord in the midst of outward tumult, and so forth.

George Fox a Journal Is by far the most noteworthy of all those autobiographical efforts, and it is one which, for originality spontaneity and unconvectious power of sincere self-expression, is probably without a rival in religious literature. George Fox was a man of poor education, who read little except his fillule, and who, with pen in hand to the last could hardly spell or construct a grammatical sentence. Let, such was the intense reality of his experience, and such the clearness of his inward vision, that his narrative, dictated, for the most part, to willing amanumence, burns with the fiame of truth and often shines with the light of artices beauty! The story of his early struggles with darkness and despair is in striking contrast with another contemporary self portrature, that of Bunyan in his Grace Abounding. Fox does not tell us of personal terrors of judgment to come his grief is that temptations are upon him, and he cannot see light. The professors of religion to whom he turns for help are empty hollow make, in whom he cannot find reality beneath the outward show

My treatise continued, and I was elsew under great temptations; I fasted much and walted alread in molitary places carry days, and often task my Bible, and west and ast in believ trees and inscesses places (III night came on; and frequency in the adapts, within somerabily shortly myself; few I was a man of correct in the three of the first workings of the Lord in me.

As I had foreshow the priests, or I laft the separate presshors also, and those setseased the most experienced people, for I new that there was none among them all that could speak to my condition. When all on jumps in these and in all many mere group, so that I had sudding estimately in help me, see could I did what to de; then, (I then I have I work which mit, there is one, even Carled Jeon, that one speak to thy soudifies ; and when I heard to, my heart did lang for by Then the Lord is an assessing the search when the see that the see when there was ence upon the earth that could speak to my condition, amonly then I might give hem all the right.

After telling of an inward manifestation of the powers of evil 'in the hearts and minds of wicked men, he goes on

I cried usta the Leed, saying, Why should I be thus, neday I was never addition to countle these exits? and the Leed nawweed. That it was needful I should have a reason of all conditions, how size should I speak to all conditions? and to this I saw the infinite laws of God. I saw also that there was no recent of durkness and seath; is that a lightly access of light and leve, which foreview the cosen of durkness. In that also I saw the infinite love of God, and I had great operatings.

More the Lord opened to use by his tertablic power that every mean was analystimed by the dirbs light of Christ; and I now it shibe through ally and that they that bedeved is it sums out of condemnation to the light of Rh, and because the shibiton of it; but they that lated it, and did not believe in R wave condemned by it, though they made a production of Christ. These things I did not see by the halp of man, nor by the letter, though they not written in the later; but I never them in the light of the Lord Joses Christ, and by the burneliate Spirit and power as this the lost years of God, by whom the Hely Sectiones were written. Yet? I all on a efforts otherway of the Hely

² The Jerrael, as kitherie pratied, was edited in grammatien! Rogbic by Ellwood solder Friends. The original has now been published excitation, with acpieus notes, by the Gambridge University From.

Seriptures, but they were very precious to me, for I was in that Spirit by which they were given forth; and what the Lord opened to me, I afterwards found was agreeable to them.

The above passages may serve to illustrate at once the simplicity and directness of For's style, and, also, the kernel of the new interpretation of the Christian Gospel which he and his followers proclaimed, and which brought them into constant collision with the ecclesiastics and the Bible-worshippers of their day. The Journal is the record, told in the same simple and often racy language, of their conflicts with priests and magistrates and howling mobs of their vallant efforts to seeme justice, and to solace the oppressed in their sufferings of troubles from the 'ranters who joined the movement and of the successful endeavours, made by one who was no mere fanatic, but in whose mind flowed a clear spring of more than worldly wisdom, to build up an organisation which should be proof against the anarchic tendencies of a system that recognised no ultimate authority but the Light Within.

Thomas Ellwood, son of an Oxfordshire squire, was a man of liberal education, who, though he moved in good society, was constrained in early rears to throw in his lot with the despised people of God. He was an intimate friend of William Penn and Issae Ponington and, through the good offices of the latter, he was for some years engaged as reader to the poet Milton in is blindness. It was Ellwood, according to a doubtful tradition', who, after reading with delight the manuscript of Paraduse Lost, suggested to Milton the theme afterwards worked out in Paraduse Regarded.

The Hustory of the Lafe of Thomas Ellewood, scritten by his own hand, gives a very lively picture of his early life and home surroundings, of inward struggies, of passive resistance to the monstrons tyranny of his father and of his share in the persecutions to which all his people were subjected. His description of prisons and prison life in the seventeenth century is of great historical value. He writes in a vivid, racy siyle, the interest of which rarely or never slags. He hits off, in a fashion worthy of Bunyan, the characters allko of friends and persecutors, and (also like Bunyan) he intersperses his prose narrative with verses which be mistakes for poetry.

Take, for illustration, the story of John Ovey the fellmonger magistrate accustomed to ride upon his pack of skins, 'grey headed and elderly, who had been a preacher among the baptists or independents and had been drawn towards Frieods. Effected took him to a meeting at Jease Penington's, which was unexpectedly broken up by a troop of home!

We all mis still is one please, arrept my companion John Ovey who sate most to ma. But he being at a profusation that approved Peter's advice to his Lord, to serve knewly some test the slarm, and with the inhibiteness at a stripling conting a caper over the form that stood before this, ran quickly out at a private door (a kiele he had before observed) which did through the purbors into the gardens, and from these the national or where he hid absent! is a please so observe, and which see considered for the intriffgrence by observation of what passed, that no mae of the family could scarce have found a Rheline.

Beveral of the party are hurried away four miles to a magistrate, but are released

Back then we want to Issue Punington's. But when we came thither, O the work we had with poor John Ovey! He was so dejected in mind, so covered with shame and confusion of face for his covarelliness, that we had seough in sic to pacely thin towards hissaelf.

John Gration was another quaker of good education, brought up to the precipiterian faith in Derbysidre. Like many nystics, he was subject to deep inward exercises, frequently culminating in visions or other incursions from the deeper layers of personality and his Journal, like that of George Fox, is of great interest to the student of religious psychology. He was, however a man of same and sober spirit, and there is no question as to his fundamental orthodoxy. He writes with ease and clearness, but lacks the crisp, pungent manner of Fox and Eliwood. Like most of his contemporaries he is and to be lone winded.

One of the livellest and best written of these early autobiographies is that of Richard Davies, of Welshpool, who tells the story of his own convincement and sufferings, and of the first propagation of the 'truth in Walse.

The Memoir of John Roberts, of Circmonator (who died in 1663), was written by his son Daniel in 1724 yet it properly belongs to this period, since the notes from which it is compiled must have been, to a large extent, contemporary with the events described. For its brightness and unfailing humour it well descrees a place in English literature. Oliver Wendell Holmes said of it

I for Moscon's Million, vol. vr., pp. 208...Q for a Nucly description of the difficulties convenience by magnification in attempting to just a familie stop to the Pricede' words.

It is as good as gold—better than gold—every page of it. It is comforting to meet, even in a book, a man who is perfectly simple-bearied, clear-beaded, and here in all conditions. The story is admirably told too—dramatically whickly!

The great mass of early quaker writings may be described as mystical, in the sense that they seek to set forth the reality of the experience of direct Dirine communion, and the life of self surrender and obedience as at once the condition and the fruit of that experience. But we may distinguish as mystical writings proper those of the works of the quakers which are not mainly autobiographical on the one hand, or controversial on the other

William Penn, son of the admiral Penn frequently mentioned by Pepra, is the most widely known of the early quakers-chiefly as the founder and first governor of the colony of Pennsylvania. His character has been flercely assailed by Macaulay and others but there seems no reason to doubt that, whatever difficulties a quaker statesman may have had to encounter in putting his principles consistently into practice, he remained absolutely sincere and worthy of the respect in which he was always held by his people. Though 'convinced of the truth of the quaker way of life at the age of 22, he does not seem to have been a mystle by temperament, but rather a clear headed English man of action, whose principles were formed, not in the school of speculation, but in that of experience. Though possessed of rich stores of learning, and great qualities as a stateman, he can hardly be regarded as a deep thinker and, as an author, in common with nearly all the writers of his time, he is often tedlous and infelicitous in expression?

The best known of his early works, No Cross No Cross, was written at the age of 24, while he was in prison in the Tower for the blasphemy of a pumphet, The Sandy Fowdation Skaken, in which he had assalled what were regarded as the strongholds of the Christian faith. His purpose in writing No Cross No Crosses he describes as to show the nature and discipline of the holy Cross of Christ and that the denial of self—is the alone way to the Rest and Kingdom of God. This is a familiar theme with mystics but Penn interprets the cross with the utmost parlian rigour decrying lexury and most of the customary ways of society His effort is a warming against wrath to come, and only incidentally an invitation to enjoy the crown of rest in the kingdom here and

¹ From a prelatery letter to the first complete edition, smitted it Quaker of the Gillen Time, 1976.

⁷ This oriticism does not apply to Some Fruits of Salitude (see later), which is written in uriny and expedient Realish.

Come, Render hearing to me awitte; I seek thy salvation; that's my Piet; face will forgive me. A Reduce is come near these His Grace batt appeared there will compare me. A compare to come near tense cim terrace mess approved to thes; it shows then the World's land, and teached; then to draw them. Receive His leaves and it will change thes; His medicine and it will core America Ann response near 12 will conseque these; Also prescribes near to will write these. This is the Grown, but where is the Grown? Where is the titles or Where is the titles or the consequence of the and shooty haptime? Omne, Rueder, he file him for this transcended day has account separate, common or man country for the resonance of the World; then thy Salration will draw also

To avoid giving a faire impression of narrowness in Ponn, it should be added that he was a warm friend of education, and fully alive to its importance.

Rature, he may (in his Address to Pretastands), is an excellent book, pleasest and predictely bothers few also I are beared either in the Heavypossess and precision; one now was, are sentent minor to an array of the Historica; I wish this were better understood; it would be

He made ample provision for education in his colony and he was the first statemen in power willing to run the risk of granting absolute liberty of conscience and of worship.

More of a mystic than Penn was his friend Issae Penington, son of an alderman and high sheriff of London who was one of the regicide judges. Penington was a graduate of Cambridge, as Penn was of Oxford. The stern and gloomy Calviniam in which he had been brought up distressed his tender spirit, and it was not till after years of deep inward questioning and isolation, and even of agnosticism, that he found peace at last by identifying himself with the quakers, whose teaching he had known but had long despised as uncouth and contrary to reason. He came to find the presence and power of the Most High among them, and declares

I have not with my God; I have not with my Seriour; and he hadk not been present with my without his salvation; her I have fall the healing along any many times about the salvation. one process was now you have a married as I have not wish the true knowledge, it has made the wings. I have not wish the true knowledge,

Penington s writings, it has been recently said, are diffuse, and on the whole unreadable. Even the titles of his voluminous works are forgotton now but the purest breath of Christian mysticism is in them for those who have the patience to find it and the power to breathe it. Take the following passage as

Knew what it is that is to walk in the path of IIIc, and indeed is alone capable of walking thresh. It is that which syroms, and which mourns that which it separtes of fool in these. The path of IIIc is for the seed of IIc. The tree knowledge of the way with the walking in the way, is reserred for God's child, for God's thild, for God's thild, for God's thild, for God's thing, over this way willing; give over thine own running; give over this own willing; give over thine was running; give over this way desiring to know or to be sarything and sink down to the seed which God sows in the heart and let this grow in these.

Before the light dawned on Isaac Penington, he had found a kindred spirit in the youthful lady Springett (born Mary Proude), who, after the death of her husband at the siege of Arundel, who, after the death of her husband at the siege of Arundel, married Penington, as she says herself, that the night be serviceable to him in his desolate condition. Their lore was the mature passion of pure and intense natures, and together they suffered cheerfully the loss of worldly goods and frequent separations when Penington was thrown into prison for what he believed to be the truth. A beautiful and worthy testimony remains in the words which Mary Penington wrote, by the bedside of her sick chilld, when her husband had been called away from earth

Ah mel he is gone) he that none exceeded in kindness, in tenderness, in love inexpressible to the relation as a wills. Next to the love of Gold in Circle Jesus to my sood, was his love precious and delightful to ma. My bosom-ous! that was as my guide and commelled my pleasant corepanion! my tender separabilising triendl as near to the sense of my pain, occores, grid, and trouble as it was possible. Tet this great help and lenefit is gones and I a poor weren, a very little once to him, compessed about with many infirmative, through mercy let him go without an amediated word of discontent, as localizate gridel.

There is no more pathetic figure, in the history of early quarerism, than that of the unhappy James Asyler, whose grievous lapse into theer extravagance led him, as a sign of the coming of the living Christ, to allow a crowd of allly women to hall him as the Messiah and who after his case ind been debated at length in the House of Commons, hore with deep contrition and exemplary patience the feroclous punlahment which was meted out to him. His writings after this haptim of fire breathe the purest spirit of invard penifence and forgiving lave. The following are the words of his last Tertimony, taken down about two hours before his death

There is a spirit which I feel, that delights to do so stil, nor to revenge any avong but delights to endure all libbars, in hope to only; its own in the edd. Its hope is to estilize all wrath and contention, and to weary out all stallation and creekly or whatever is of a nature variety to itself. It sees to the end of all transplations; as it bears no svil in itself, so it conceives nonor the son are all temperatures; as in some so with an interior in common some in the depth is any other; if it be betrayed it bears if; for its ground and is tangents in any scane; it is no untrapped a manual of the country of the particles and forgingness of Gad. He crown is marked and forgingness of Gad. systems as on the markets and suggestions of their states as markets of the service of the servi

Another beautiful testimony to the spirit that animated those early quakers is given by William Dewsbury who, shortly before his death, said, after a long and terrible imprisonment in Warrick

This I can say I serer played the coward, but joyfully salered Pricess as Asset, felling rates exemise to hold so there as long as they could need in Places, traing may some on one are core or any or any or one, are the Prison Here I sang praises to my God, and externed the Bells and the Attendant Control of Section of the Steman Gold I always and the Section of the Steman Gold I always got the Victory

The early quakers, like most Christian mystics, had no thought of setting themselves in opposition to fundamental orthodoxy as they understood it. But, ineritably their courtant appeal to the they understood it. Dut, inertisably user constant appear to use Mithin, and their consequent referral to bow down to outward authority brought them into flerce conflict with the outstand authority orought ment into more common and two rangious reasons or soon may by meas or whom see more soon been crected into the final and only rule of faith and practice. open erected must see men and only rule of mand and practice.

And so, as they were compelled to defend themselves against attacks which condenned them, with indiscriminate violence, as papers, beretics, atheists and biasphemers, the purpose of their tables a notice and more directly theological. On both sides, it is to be feared above counted for more than argument, and the oblivion into which these reams of printed matter have fallen cannot be said to have been undeserred.

So early as 1656, John Bunyan attacked the quakers, without explicitly naming them in Some Gospel Trucks Opened, and was answored by Edward Barrough and George Fox Thomas Hicks, the haptist, remed the wrath of Elwood by his Dialogue between too capitas, roused up wrent of convoca of the sensing of a Christian and a Grader and Richard Batter in his Quality's Cutrobian, complaining of their violent and railing language, denounced them as aboutleable infidels, Pagers and a generation of the Devil. In kindlier rein, Henry More, the Cambridge Platonist while admitting as safe and reasonable the principle of the light within a man, expressed his sorrow at their imcounts and ridiculous opinious, and was sorely griered when his friend the learned and philosophical viscountees Conway (dengitor of speaker Finch) Joined berself to what he described as the most melancholy sect that ever was in the world. To all these, and many more, the quakers issued voluminous replies?

Of Penus controversial writings, The Sandy Foundation Shaken, which got him into the Tower Innocency with her Open Face, by which he won his release The Christian Quaker, and Principe Christomity Revived, it is needless now to speak. A word must, however be said concerning the prodigious apologia of Samuel Fisher (1666), entitled Rusticus ad Academicos a work of nearly 600 quarto pages, closely printed, containing single sentences that sometimes run to a roge and a half? In spite of its incredible long windedness, it is a work of great learning and sound sense. Fisher deals in a quite modern manner with the canon of Scripture, showing wide knowledge of its history, and also of the various Biblical manuscripts then accessible to scholars. He can be caustic, too, when he chooses, as when he replies to the argument of dean Owen that the Holy Spirit, while preserving somewhere the true text, has arranged variations between the MSS in order to encourage diligence in the study of Scripture-

Whence came this whittle and whiresy within the circumference of thy figmentitious fancy?

There is one book, out of all this welter of controversy, that can be read today with interest and profit An Apology for the True Christian Divinity by Robert Barclay son of David Barclay of Ury who had served as a soldier under Gustavus Adolphus, and had afterwards joined the quakers. Robert Borolay was brought up among the strictest Calvinists in Scotland, and among Catholics during his studies in Paris nevertheless, without any unring from his father he, also, at the age of nineteen became

When I came into the elicat seemblies of God's people, I felt a secret power among them, which fouched my heart; and as I gave way unto it, I found the oril weakening in me and the good raised up; and so I became thus halt and solted unto them, bungering soore and more after the inerreas of this power and life, whereby I might feel myself perfectly redressed³

the sontroversial methods of the seventurally century. Box, under the heading. High names, the extraordinary selection of forces applied to the quakers.

* Applyry Provontion 24.57

a quaker

I In rol. 2 of E. Arber's Term Consigner, the titles are given of 44 books written against the quakers between the years 1671 and 1630. Joseph Resith's Bibliothera Anti-Quehriana (1873), contains an alphabetical catalogue of many hundreds of these writings. George Pax's The Great Mystery (1637) but replies to over one hundred attacks on the quakers. The index to this extraordinary work as worth examining as a qualet example of

The Early Quakers

Robert Barclay is the first of the very few theologians who Hobert Harciay is the first of the very low theologicals were the Society of Friends has produced. Possessed of remarkable the society of Friends mas produced. Prosessed of remarkable natural gifts, he set himself deliberately to the study of theology natural gins, no set number democrately to the study or thousand mastering Greek and Hebrow the writings of the Fathers and the mattering Greek and Hebrow the writings of the Fathers and too history of the Christian church. His Apology was written at the hartory or the Curratuan course. His Aposony was written as the carly age of 26, but is the work of a mature mind. It was written early age of Mt, but is the work or a mature name. It was written first in Latin, was afterwards translated into English and low mrs: in Laim, was siterwards translated into Longitud and Now Dutch and became the chief classic of the quaker faith. Learned Duton and necessive the onice causes of the quarter fails. Learness and scholastic as it is, the style is clear and flowing, and it can be and senousatio as it is, the style is even aim moving and is can be read with case. In a series of fifteen propositions, or These read with case. In a series of integer propositions, or access Theologicae he deals with the true foundation of knowledge, with Tacocyticos no ocan with the true numerature or anowicege, with the Scriptures, with universal and saving Light, and so forth

ing 14gns, and so torto.

The following passage will serve to illustrate at once his style and his treatment of the problem of justification

We endows and not by this Justification by Carist, barnly the good works We understand not by this dustification by the darry the good worse wrongshi by the Spirit of Christ, for they as Protestants truly affirm. eron wrought by the Spirit of Unitary for they as Professions truly astron.

are relies the effect of Jacobia-side than the cause of it; but we understood are rather the effect of Justification than the cause of it; but we understand the formation of Obriet in an Obriti born and brought forth in an from the formation of (dries in as, theret here and brought forth in as, from which food works as naturally proceed as fruit from a fruitful free. It is which good works as makerally proceed as fruit from a fruitful true. It is this inward birth in as beinging forth rightscomes and boliness to on that this inward birth in an bringing forth rightcommon and hollows in on their holds justify us; which having removed and done away the contrary nature dots justify us; which having removed and done away the contrary nature and spirit that did four role and bring condensation, now is in doubless and spirit that did bear rule and bring condensation, now is in dominion over all in our housts. This is to be clothed with Chriss, and to have put ever all in ser heart. This is to be cirched with thrink, and to have por him on, whom God therefore truly accountable right from and fact. By this him on, whom that therefore truly accounts to regations and just also comes the communication of the goods of Carist into us, by which we also comes the communication of the grouts of Christ into us, by which we come to be made Partializes of the divine nature, as said a partial of the divine nature, as said as a partial of the divine nature, as a come to be made particlers of the divine mature, as smith 2 Peter 1 6, and are made one with him, as the immediac with the vine, and have a title and right made one with him, as the betweener with the wine, and have a title and vigal to what he both does and sufficed for our so that his obscious because sure,

There is very little in the writings of the early quakers that has not some directly fractical or controversia sim. Among me not some unvery passival or consurerant and among purely literary efforts, however mention should be made of more purely meetal convers, measurer measure amount we make a William Penn's Some Fracts of Solitade, and of the rare attempts Valuate reas a cosses of racing of continues, and of the racing at poetry or rather remainstation, put forth by one or two of them.

poerry or rainer remandation, put torus up one or tau or more.

R. L. Stevenson has told of the comfort and refreshment has gained, in sickness and lensliness, from a copy of Some Frank of Source, it assesses and outcomes, stem a copy of commentation of Source of S is a collection of aphorisms, fruits, as Pem calls them, that may as a concession of spinorman, some as a term of the second of the resider for texts to preach to himself upon. It has the writing, rare, indeed, at that time and among these writing of struct rare, managed as the market arrows more winers or any straining after literary effect, in natural, clear and cogent

English. It is lit up with a kindly humour and its satire, while mordant at times, is neare hitter or cynical. The first part was written between 1690 and 1693, when Penn was living in seclusion in London under suspicion of treachery owing to his former friendship with James II. Twice he was arrested and brought to trial on a charge of disloyalty but, on both occasions, was discharged. This explains why the book was published anonymously but its authorship has now been conclusively proved. The second part, Hore Fruits of Solitude, dates from just after the accession of oneen Anne.

The following will serve as evidence of the pungent brevity with which Penn could express himself when he chose

Truth often suffers more by the heat of its defenders then from the arguments of its opposers.

Let the People think they govern, and they will be governed.

The Humble, Mesk, Mercilel, Jast, Picca, and Derout scale, are every where of one religion; and when death has taken off the mesk they will know one another though the diverse liveries they wear here makes them strangers.

Speak properly and in as few words as you can, but always plainly; for the col of speech is not estentation, but to be anderstood.

This is the comfort of friends, that, though they may be said to dis, yet their friendship and society are, in the best sense, ever present, because immortal.

Of poetry, in the writings of the early quakers, there is nothing that deserves the name. Such versification as we find is, for the most part, pressed disquisition on moral and spiritual themes, marked by plety without impiration, and facility without imagination. Thomas Elwood, in addition to the 'poems which are wattered through his antobiography, based A Collection of Poems on Various Subjects, from which we extract the following

He's a true force not who can analog. Heariers and giant for his mitrous eake, Aud sight perhaps, and warps, with mach ade For fear she should some either happy sake; But who so far her happlesses penfers. Bafore his away, that he can be constent. To sacrifice his swn to purchase here, Though with the price of his own hastdoment.

The quakers, as is well known, gave to women an equal place with men in the ministries of the spiritual life and perhaps the only approach to poetry in their literary output, before the days of Barton and Whittier, is to be found in a little volume of letters and poems entitled Freds of Retirement, by Mary Molliness (born Southworth), published shortly after her death in 1895. It includes the following Meditations in Tondo.

The Early Ouakers

114

O Whither is he guns? Or where final I go mourn, till he appear, Who is my life, my lore? Alse, how shall I more Him to return, that's secretly retired Like units one displaced, Who, till he be appeared,

My heart council be seed & He is one totaly and to be admired! It might have been expected that the deep inward experiences of these maker mystics would have found montaneous expression in lyrical years, but so it was not to he. Very early their spiritual life became confined in bonds, and freedom and anontaneity were largely lost in a rigner of thought and life that left little scope for originality of impired expression. With the eighteenth century the glow of the first experience faded, and the third owners tion of the quakers, while retaining much of the purity and provorbiliness and spirituality of their predecessors, became, for the most part, the children of a tradition. Ouletism settled down more them, a quietien which while it produced noble fruit in a John Woolman and an Elizabeth Fry left the majority more enocemed to maintain the discipline of a 'peculiar people than to make known a spiritual Gospel to the world.

CHAPTER V

THE RESTORATION DRAMA

I

WITH the ordinance of 2 September 1642, commanding the closing of the theatres and the total suppression of stage plays, the long and brilliant chapter of the drama that had known the triumples of the days of Elizabeth and her two successors came to an abrupt and dismal end. Although declared roques by a later act and threatened with the whipping post for pursuing their calling the actors did not at once obey these stringent laws! We hear of performances 'three or four miles, or more, out of town, and of plays acted at the Cocknit, for example in 1648, when 's party of soldiers beset the house and carried the actors away in their habits to Hatton House, then a prison. During the commonwealth, occasional performances were connived at, 'sometimes in noblemen's houses where the nobility and gentry met, but in no great numbers at others, in sensons of festivals such as Christmas or Bartholomew fair even at the old playhouses. among them the Red Bull. But, even with bribes to the guard at Whitehall, immunity against arrest and safety from rough handling for auditor and actor were not to be awared. It is not wonderful that, during the rebellion, the players declared them selves, almost to a man, on the side of the king. Beveral of them served with distinction on the royalist side but the end of the war found most of them in exilo with their betters or reduced to porerty*

¹ For the term of the most important of these laws, see Hashit, W Ct., The Espirah Drema and Stays, 1832—1844, Ronburghe Library 1869 pp. 63—70.
2 On this term, see Wright's Historia Historialia, first published in 1899 reprinted in Deddler vol. 2

116

Amusements of the dramatic kind being now under the ban, various devices were employed to erade the letter of the law! Interesting among these were the drolls or droll humours, as they were called farces or humorous scenes adapted from current plays and staged, for the most part, on extemporised scaffolds, at taverus and fairs, and sometimes, even, at regular theatres! Thus, a 'diroll, emittled Marry Concests of Bottom the Weaver, was printed as early as 1646, and a dozen or so by Robert Cox, notable for his performance in them. A large collection entitled The Wits, or Sport upon Sport, collected by Francis Kirkman the book seller appeared in the early seventies, when the acting of these things had been superseded by the revival of the more regular drams. It may be remarked, in passing that the application of the term droll to stage recitals in commonwealth days is allke distinguishable from its earlier employment to signify a puppet or a purpost-show and from the use of the word 'drollery which was applied to any piece of humour or ribaldry in verse. Among drolls derived from well known plays may be named The Greece Diggers Collegely from Hamlet, Fullstoff The Bouncing Knight from Henry IV and The Duckbashet Miskap from The Merry contrived to please the vulger and appeal to the least refined.

Towards the close of Cromwell's rele, the laws against dramatic entertainments appear to have been somewhat relaxed, and Eir William D'Avenant, who had been governor of the king and queen scompany of players, setting at the Cockrist, and had beld a patent, dated 1639, empowering blin to erect a new playhouse, was abritonally the man first to provide for a returning interest in plays. D'Avenant's earlier plays and maquos' have aiready been mentioned in a previous volume of this work. The son of an Oxford tarern keeper and, if the story be authentic, Skalaspeare's godson, D Avenant had been taken up by the court he had staged plays in the manner of Fletcher as early as 1650 had succeeded Ben Jonson as poet hurreste in 1638, and, later, had served the royal Wives. Other scenes, like Cox's Humours of Simpleton the Smith and John Sucabler were inventions of the actors. All were

³ Book was the manages of the inner Teigrin, Newsonker 1653, Cardinar History of the Communication and the Protessinste, vol. 21, pp. 15, 23.
³ Ward, Hosory of Saylish Democrit Lettersters, vol. 21, pp. 250.

³ W Exercités reprint of Watteducter Declinio 1978, is a collection of humaness were and non-demantic. His introduction, consultant shiel in this conmodium, little conserve the demantic final. Hattreed-Phillippe reprinted overall Statesparent fruits in 1884.

Ber anie vel. 15, p. $60, party through many vicinitudes afield and in intrigue abroad and at home, suffering imprisonment for several years and narrowly escaping the gallows. In the later years of the commonwealth, be had lived more quietly in London and at length, chiefly through the influence of the lord-keeper. Sir Bulstrode Whitelocke, obtained authority for the production of a species of quasi-dramatic enter tainment which, though given at private houses, was public in so far as money was taken for entrance. D'Avenant a carliest venture in this kind was entitled The First Day's Entertainment at Rut land House, by declamation and music, after the manner of the ancients, printed in 1657, and staged 21 May of the previous year By some, this venture has been called an opera and strangely enough. D'Avenant refers to it by this title in his prologue and elsewhere. The Perst Day's Entertainment is really made up of two pairs of speeches, the first by Diogenes and Aristophanes successively against and for public entertainment, by moral presentation, the second, in lighter vein, between a Parisian and a Londoner on the respective merits of the two cities. The whole was diversified with music by Coleman. Lawes (composer of the music of Comess) and other musicians of repute in their day D'Avenant had made provision for four hundred anditors, but only a hundred and fifty appeared. Emboldened, however by this qualified success, he projected a more ambitious entertainment. This was the celebrated Siege of Rhodes, made a representation by the art of prospective in scenes and the story sung in recitative music, presented in August 1656. In an address To the Reader which appears in the first edition of that year, but was not after wards reprinted. D Avenant points out that the story as represented — is heroical, and notwithstanding the continual harry and heary agitations of a hot siegs, is (I hope) intelligibly conveyed to advance the characters of virtue in the shapes of valenz and conjugal love.

The author was too close to triumphant paritanism not to feel it necessary to justify the moral supects of his art. Of the recitative music, an 'unpracticed novelty in England, the author tells us that it was composed and exercised by the most transcendent of England in that art and it is clear that the cast was chosen with reference to this important operatio feature. As to the five changes of scene, he regrets that all is confined to eleven foot in height and about fifteen in depth including the places of passage reserved for the music a narrow allowance, he continues, for the fleet of Solyman the Magnifecent, his army the Island of Rhodes and the varieties attending the siege of the city The

Siege of Rhodes, on the dramatic side, is an amplified altuation, occes of moores, on the dramatic store is an ampuned situation, laying no claim to plot, characterisation or variety save such as laying no claim to piot, enaracterisation or variety save such as arises from change of scene, appropriate costume and attendant arms from change of scoots appropriate contains and automatic minic. The Releases ridicules a battle performed in recitative mustic by season betacase only and it must be confessed that this music by sorou persons only and is music to concessor that the first English opera, is dramatically as absurd as its species has are segmen opers as aramanicany as ansure as an aspector associationed, with certain exceptions, ever since. The Sugge of continued, with certain exceptions, ever since. The cices we Rhodes is often described as the first English play to employ nature in other newships as a scheme appeared on the first in which an actives appeared on the finglish scency and use mean wants an acutes appeared on use magness fage. Neither of these statements is correct. Changes of scenery and even perspective in some were in popul, if not common, and wren porspectate in across some on the stage, not to mention long before 1656. As to women on the stage, nor to mention some earlier examples, Mrs Coleman, who played the part of same carries cassington, are voicement, and passes one passes. In the first Day's Enter surgery and was chosen doubtless, in both instances for her voice rather than for her acting. In 1888, D'Arenant opened the rather than for her acting. In 1658, D'Avenani opened use Cockpif theatre in Drury lane, producing there two similar opera, The Crucky of the Spaniards in Peru and The History opens, the trucky of the opensurus in term and the strucky of for Francis Drake. Their historical intent and scenic go our structure structure structure structure and section morelly may well have distanced purities suspicion, though Richard nursity may wen mave distantined purpose statistical, anough automated. Cromwell is said to have ordered an enquiry into the performance at the Occupit, of which, however, nothing came. Affairs were now moving rapidly towards the restoration of

Ang Charles. General Monck arrived in London in the first days ang ourse. Unsern rivers arrived in measure in the large caps of February 1659/50, and one John Rhodes, a bookseller and or sourcest the variety of the king's company at Black sometime acoper to two naturates to two angle company as some formation of a dramatic company A second company gathered at the Red Bell, a third at Salisbury court in Whitefrier, and Sir Henry Herbert, master of the revels, awake to the detice or many mercers, measure or one record across to one outline bad by him in hope and abeyance. Upon his restoration, king Charles famed a patent to Thomas Killigrew and Sir William D'Avenant, ARTY MA. L.

In the performance of Oxforight's Reputs Since of Oxford, in August 1684, the in the presentation of Uniterlying a surject above on Uniterly to Author 1866, to come was distinged eight times. East the quarte of this play of 1869, James allested street was exempted agent times, one too quarter or time purp or thirty, James attended to a piece of purposetry in 1800, Cynthic's Provinciana (Cifford Outstiglant's January, vol. 12, p. 214.

tion, which peaks.

Though advance appeared in Landon as easily as fifty and ware may unforestably Francisco segundo especial en acciona se acriy se con para vez my successora y receivant y la manqua and libra embridataments incline had long action prominent part. reserved in manyous and one merculations in some one long intent principles for this just, not Laurenau, W. J. Early French Physics in England, Aspill, vol. aan prom (Incorporated in 13th Physicene to be Left, printed in the faile of 1873.

empowering them to 'erect two companies of players' This raised a storm of protest, especially from Herbert, who immediately petitloned the king and council and brought settom in the courts, singling out D'Avenant as his peculiar foo and describing him as one who had 'obtained leave of Oliver and Richard Grom well to vent his operas at a time when your petitioner owned not their authority' In the first instance, combination, and then a second division, of the two companies followed, but, before long the claims of Herbert were adjusted and the two royal patentoes were upheld. Their troupes soon became known, Killigrow's as the king's, and D'Avenants as the duke of York's, company of players. In 1631 the latter company removed to a new playbouse built for them in Lincoln's inn fields, Portugal row, and, later in 1673, after the death of D'Avenant, to the sumptuous theatre in Esilabary court, Flocs treet, a site personaly known as Dorset garden. D'Avenant's house was commonly called 'the opera from the performance of musical plays there. But D'Avenant by no means gave an undivided attention to such productions. The king's company (Killigrow's), variously housed before 1663, removed in that year to the Theatre Royal in Drury lane, Covening and the contraction of the covered in that year to the Theatre Royal in Drury lane, Covening and the contraction of the covered in that year to the Theatre Royal in Drury lane, Covening and the contraction of the covered in that year to the Theatre Royal in Drury lane, Covening and the covered in the country lane, Covening and the covered in the covered in the tree covered in the tree covered in the covered in the year to the Theatre Royal in Drury lane, Covening and the covered in the covered in the tree covered in the year to the Theatre Royal in Drury lane, Covening and the covered in the covered in the tree covered in the tree covered to the tree covered to the tree covered to the covere

Thomas Killigrew, a member of a loyal Corniah family had been reared a page in the court of Charles I, and continued a favourite companion of that monarch son and successor As groom of his majesty's bedchamber Killigrew remained a privileged servant in the royal household and was reputed, from his ready colloquial wit, the king's jester His carlier plays were written abroad and acted before the closing of the theatres. Among them are The Prusoner, Claracilla and The Prusones, tragicomedies of approved adventurous romantic type. They mark, in their extravagance of adventure, exaggerated character and inflated rhetoric, a step from the immediate imitators of Fietcher to the restoration herole play and group naturally with the like efforts of Sir William Lower and Lodowick Carlell. A later tragicomedy by Killigrew Cecilia and Cornada, borrowed its subject, in part, from Le Grand Cyrns, a sufficient indication, perhaps, of the general nature of the poet's sources for serious plays. Among several consedies that appear in the collected in this controversy are reprinted.

¹ This patient bears date $1 August 1650 and is found in the two principles faintly it is posted eather by Malone in the protestment to his edition of Endanquero, 1821, ed. m, pp. 219—215.
² See the same p. 217 where the publishes of Ric Heavy Herbert and other papers.

The Restoration Drama

edition of Killigrow's works, 1864, The Parson's Wedding, like outcom or compress a sureas, 1000, 100 d'arraon s' recourse, men-whe a pro-restoration play is the most complexuous. This is a who a pro-restoration maximized coarseners a quality which the content to anneae unmanapored customers, a quanty water too actor man not sounce in the sounce, valuations are acted after the reopening of Many or Aungress pears were access after the reopening of the theatres and The Parson's Wedding enjoyed minimal popuand measure and the furses of seating enjoyed underly larity. Two other Killigrows, brothers of Thomas, brought their narty 1 are other almigroup, december to limiting, december the stage! Sir William Killigrow published in controunces to the season of the season and ormanics, or Lors and 100s, acroe pusts, occasion, resource and ormanics, or rose use Friendskip. The last was subsequently rewritten under the Priceducip. The last was subsequently rewritten under the influence of the new heroic drams. A fourth dramatic work of amorance or use now mirrors urains. A nourse missing was a this author The Steps of Urbin, has been with justice described can acusor "Re cloye Q' Urum, ms been with justice described as a capable and sympathetic play. Not all of these were acted. Henry Hillsrow a younger brother wrote but one play so far steary amegram a younger proper arous out one pay so me as is known. It was published first in 1638 under the title The Conspiracy and, rewritten, in 1653, as Pallantes and Endorn. Thomas Hilligrew the Jounger also a writer of plays, belongs to ance generated.

The works of Sir William D'Avenant, poethumonaly collected, the road of our remain playerest prominents connected, bear date 1869. D'Avenant staged most of his plays and some of them were not undescredly successful. Several of his rewritten plays, such as Love and Honour The Wits and The Platonick page, such as some constituents and the sum one removing long remained popular favoration but his work sub-Accord, long remained popular navouries for his work sub-sequent to the restoration is made up largely of older dramas sequent to the renoration is made up in gay or owner utames.

Thus, we hear of Macketh, remainment to more true constitutions. Along we more or accurrence, staged with alterations, amendments, additions and new scores angus with acceptance, and of Beatrice and Benedick thrust into Meaners for Meaners and the result renamed The Low Aponaid Loperz. Rosseo and Juliet was transformed into a comedy and acted alternately with the Shakespearan version?

The repertoirs of the first years of the restoration exhibits an active revival of the masterpieces of the earlier drama. Betreen acute return on the mean process of the country of the opening of the new theatres and April 1663, Popps and Othello, Heavy IV A Hidramor Night's Dream, Jones a Silent Women

I for billingraph, as in James Hornelly Reason and Julie, we costs, p. 30 min 2. As to D'Armand and Dryllan's revision of Tax. Turpost, and Embryolly administration as easily p. 38 and costs. It is a supplementary administration as easily p. 38 and costs. It is a supplementary administration as easily p. 38 and costs. and Jupiness review of the Company, and American Security Securities and American Security Codes Security Secur Note 2. Other He adaptations are Radowlly Florin of Albert, Resembled Floring Administration, Their Roy Law and Settleton Henry IV Different STREET For Note In Proceed STREET IN THE SECOND STREET IN Two reconstitutes as and among whose transmittees the decision trapped tool manually by a new fifth one Detection adapted The Prophenics, Vachingto The Priprint county by a new mean one, assume suppose has exposented, facilities the Princes. The Tab International Conference and of these originally Products. D'URBY 2 M don repupe, abn an animo creame, all or home. Farquine's Instantes in an adaptation of The Fill-Green Class.

and Bartholomese Fayre, Fletcher's Tamer Tamed, The Beggary and northonomes rayes rictions a timer times, the newyork and Beaumont's Knight of the Burning Petils, Middleton a HER and Deadmont a ARYM OF the DEFRING COMP. COME, CHARLES MARKET BEARD LORD AND STREET Changeing conney a variance, manager a nova-stan and several more! Hanket was among the first plays revived, and it furnished more. Massace was among too must plays revived, and it immused one of Betterton's most signal triumphs. A taste for the herote in one of Detection a most agent triumpes. A trate for the instruct of drams, a heritage from Fletcher and his initiators in the previous orams, a nerrosso trem recursor and me minusions in the previous age, is noticeable in D Avenant's own Steps of Rhodes and, more age, is nonceasis in DATEMENT'S OWN Steps of Assues and more especially, in his really fine tragicomedy Love and Honour especially, in any reasy time tragicomeany were and account the way to spring into fall flower in the herode plays of How this was to spring into full nower in the nertic plays or Dryden, Orrery and others, has been already shown in an earlier Dryuen, veriery and others, may oven arready anown in an earlier chapter. The beginnings of opera, also, may be postponed for the moment A distinctive feature of the earlier drama of the restoration is

A continuous of the current political reaction. The playwrights, to its renection or the current pointed renection. The past wrights, it a man, extelled absolute monarchy and branded as disloyal any a man, extensed accounts insumment and unantied as unity at any one who falled obsequiously to observe and follow the lead and one wine issued observationary to observe our remove the read and the winds of the king. As to the puritar, while he was in power the wanes or one king. As to one puritan, while he was in power fow had dared openly to lampoon him but, with the swing of low nast carred openly to ampoon mm out, with the swing or popular loyalty back to the monarchy the church and the old Popular jujusty unca to too mountruly the course and the out calabilated order of things, the puritan became fair game for established order of tumps, the puritan occasion has game for the satire of his foca. General Monck was still in the north, and the saure of the focal veneral alones was suit in the north, and Lambert, sent to oppose him, had been but recently deserted by tambert, sone to oppose am, use over our recurry occurred by his troops, when John Tatham staged his satirical piece of dramatic ns troops, when some returning stages are securious piece or unsumate journalism. The Rivery Tatham had been a contriver of pageants for the city and had written a pastoral, Love Crowns the End so for the city and man written a personal twie covers one courses for back as 1632 a tragedy of no great merit, ominously called mr ouck as 1000, a tragetry of no great mern, ominously caused. State, and a piece of bitter satire against the Scots whom the author appears especially to have hated, entitled Scots, whom the author appears especially to mare natcu, cultured The Scotch Properties. In The Ramp or the Mirrorr of the Late As occide a sometime in the stamp or the staryour of the same fathern boldly impoons Lambert, Fleetwood, However and times, tattum voicily manpious semious, a recommon, atomain and other notabilities of the moment, representing the widow of Crom other notabilities or the moment, representing the widow of Grom well as an undignified acold and lady Lumbert as preposterously and irrationally eager to thrust her husband into the succession to and irrationally eager to turns her majorne into the succession to the protectorate, so that she may be addressed. Jour highness. the Protectorate, so that ane may be addressed four nightness. Several scenes of this comedy are not without a certain comic Several scenes of this comedy are not without a certain come effectiveness and the final reduction of these lofty personages to encertrenous and the man reduction of these total personages to street vendors, peddling their wares displays the popular humour arrer renders, pending their wares only to popular number and temper of the moment. Another typical coincid of the type and temper of the moment. Another tylecal collecty of the type is Sir Robert Houard's The Committee produced in 1050 and long See Grand, val. L. p. 21.

A list of the plays of Rhades a company is made up largely of works of Florishee

popular: It tells directly and not without force the story of a popular. It tens directly and not without force the story of a hypocritical puritan committee of sequestration, made up of such hypocriscal purion committee or sequentration, made up or soon personages as Achemiah Catch, Jonathan Headstrong and Erekiel personages as Achemian Carch, Jonathan Headstrong and Arceres Scrape, and how they and a dishunest guardian were outwitted by Scrape, and now they and a distinguist guardian were outwitted by two clover maidens and their cavaller lovers. A botter written two clerer mainers and their cavaner sovers. A botter written comedy though it was less successful in its day is Cowley's Outler concery though it was less successful in its day is Cowley's October of Coleman Street, brought out by D Avenant among his carifest of total and the such characters as meny sharking Cutter renures. Whise such characters as merry sharking Uniter who turns puritan for his workilly welfare and has visious of the who tarms purman for his workery westers and that restorm of the dealogue abounds in downtail or manyion, are amount, and the malogue abounds in clorer thrusts at the cent and weaknesses of fallen puritanism, ciorer tururis at the cant and weakingses or name purnament. Cowley's comedy cannot be pronounced a dramatic success. Nevercoursely a consequence of the portraiture of colonel July the thereas, the training on the edge of dishencesty and driven in crunsen cavancer resums on the edge of designers and defined in the need to composition with the saints, brought down on the boot a board the displeasure of some who know no vious excepting us need to composition with the same, provided to the displeasure of some who know no vious excepting Pour near the supplements of some who know no vices excepting those that flourish among their enomies. Comedies attricing the toose that nouran among their enomies. Unmeries activating the puritans continued popular throughout the reign of Charles II as puritans continued popular inroughout the reign or Charles II as is seen from such productions as Lacy a The Old Troop (before as seen from sum productions as lacys 2 Me Old 2700p (before 1665), Crownes City Politics, 1673, and Mrs Behns The Round. 1000), Gruenes city Founce, 10/2, and are beens fee nown, Acade, 1682, a shameless appropriation of Tathama The Theory.

Turning now to individual playwrights of the restoration not turning now to incurrence prayerights of the renoration not incidentally treated in the paragraphs above, we find some that incidentally treated in the paragraphs above, we find some that preserved unfouched the older traditions of English consoly Proserved unioncised the older truditions or Logista cancely Foremost among them was John Wilson, a native of Plymoeth, Foremost among them was soon without, a nature of retrooping and a student of the law called to the bar in 1646. Through the and a student of the dake of York whose secretary be had been in good onces or the onke of lors, whose secretary he mus wom in Ireland, Wilson became recorder of Londonderry and throwing ireand, Wiscon occurse recorder or anoncondery and turnsing himself into the Jacobite cause, remained in Dublin after the nament into the seconds course, reasoned in traum after the according of king William. He died in London in 1000. Wilson accession or sing 19 man. He were in Leanuan in 1990. 19 man. fe the author of four plays, the carllest of which, The Cheals, was is the acutor or four pass, the carnoss of which, and waters, and written in 1669 and onlyred an extraordinary popularity on the written in 1003 and enjoyed an extraordinary popularity on the stage. It is a prose comedy frankly following the manner of stage. It is a prose concern training tomorang the manner of Jonson. Mopos, the quack astrologer the sharking braves, Bilboe some and There To, the nonconformist minister Scruple who finds the and like the leads to conformity on $300 a year but is steadled in against the wiles of Babylon by an offer of 400-all are protest against the wine or recopion by an other or any—an are pure Joseon, but rung to new changes that dely the augmentions pure someon, our rung to here coampre than unit and auggreences of plagiarism. Not less Joneonian is Wilson's second comedy The

C. cons. comp. 1, F. au nome a. (Orwire) play we extinctly asked The Generalism. It was saided at Combinings for Owners pay was sequency make The Generals. If was asked at Owner, and published mader this surface title in 1880. Of each yell yet, b. 22.

Projectors, 1664. Here, a group of these sharks (a favourite Arriverors, 100%. After, a group of these analysis (a naturality subject for ridicule with Jonson himself) are represented, busy with sauject for renicute with someon numbers / are represented, ones with their victim, Sir Gudgeon Oredalous, and the long line of univers on the stage is bettered in Suckdry and his servant and foll, Lean on the stage is occurred in ouckury and this servant and ton, accur-chops! Wilson's comedy is vigorous, full of effective and good caups. Truston's councily is vigorous, and on enecutre and grown humonred caricature, and successfully imitative of the better numerical carricature, and successionly minimize on the nesters art. Besides these excellent comedica, Wilson is the author of a tragedy Andronious Commenter, of admirable conduct and vigour, and written in blank verse of a freedom compacted with firmness that recalls the better work of the previous age. The actual story of Andronicus Commenta, of the previous age. The actual about to animonicus vontreum, hypocritical, treacherons and pittless in his murderous path of appointment, areacuerous and puriess in its marriagous parallels the story of the hunchback Richard of historical and dramatic falls. Such, however, seems to have been the author's literary conscience that, save for seems to mayo used the author's interact communities which closely resembles the courtship of lady Anne by one scene, which crossed his theme originally and with inventive rariety. The date of Andronicus Commentus is noticeable for in 1664 the stage was ringing with Dirden's Rival-Ladies, and his and Sir Robert Howard's Indian Queen. Wilson's fourth play Rephagor, or the Marriage of the Devil printed in 1691 pay napuspur, or we scarringe of the very printed in rows is less interesting, though elaborated with much detail. The story referable to Machiavelli s well known novelia, had been treated before in English drama and may have been suggested to Wilson by Jonson's unsuccessful play of similar theme, The Direct of an dus

Among other names which occur in the dramatic annals of the same summer trainers which occur in the treatment which of the rotum of king Charles is that of Sir Robert Stappiton, the author of a comedy The Sighted of oir stowers orolygical, the name of a confect and confect and as not a prefly good comedy and as not acted for the first time in 1663. Stappiton a tracicomedy The Secret for the time in the same of the secret for the same of the secret for the Signmother 10010wed in the same year the is the author 100, of a tragody on Hero and Leander Stappilon was a translator from French and the classics, and of some repute in his day. His from Fermi and the changes, and in some repute in his day the post as gentleman-maker to king Charles doubtless disposed him, like other royal acreants, to an interest in the drama. Whether the trivial but witty comedy Mr Anthony printed in 1000 be the This play was likewise indured by the dukaleria of Plavica.

The party was likewise independed by the distincts of Plattin.

Georgical Richard III., and it, so, 2, and distincts of Plattin.

Constitution of Constitution a ariably writer Commentus for Comments. arisity writes Communities for Communities.

Sompton Hampton, The Bertl and Mr. Dane mentioned in Headows's disty and especially Dellier's V II Be Net Good, the Direct is to it.

Ormers, Some directed of the English Stage 7th L p. 46.

work of Roger Boyle, earl of Orrery or not, its clear following work of 100ger Boyle, carri of Orrery or Bot, 11st clear rottowns of the models of earlier comedy is sufficient to place it berei or the moment of earner comedy is summent to place it here.

Ordery is memorable for his heroic dramas, which have been already Ortery is memorable for his nervice dramas, which have been suready noted. The duke of Newcastle, too, and his clever duches had notes. The duke of Newcastle, too, and his overer duchess and both long been dabblers in the drama. But, neither the futorship both long open danders in the drama. But, neither the interants of Ben Jomeon, nor that of Shirley later contrived to produce in or near someon, nor time or country inter continued to produce in either of the pair results deserving serious attention from the einer or the pair remits observing serious attention from the stadent of literature. Two comedies by the duke—The Hamorous student of intersture. Two comedies by the dure—Lee Humorous Lovers and The Triumphant Widors—were acted after the re-Lowers and The Tricompagns Pridon were acress after the restoration and printed in 1073. Twenty-one plays by the duchess storation and printed in 10/3. A wenty-one puage by the uncarea were published in a folio volume of 1652. They have been described were published in a fullo volume of 100x. They have been concribed as fertile in invention and as tending to extravagators and an as fertile in invention and as tending to extravagance and an excess of nurefixed fun. Thus, in the midst of a steady revival excess or correspond non-xnow, in the mount of a second review of the plays of the old drama, extending, in accordance with the or the plays of the coid drame, extending, in accordance with the court, to comedies of bliddleton and Brone, the that years of the restoration passed by is years of the restoration passed by

But comedy on the revival of the stage, was not to be confined

Due comedy on the revival of the stage, was not to be common to the sailre of contemporary allusion and a following of the to the satire of contemporary alignon and a following of the hamours of Jonson. In a striking passage of his Last of Drysics, namours or someon. In a striking passage or an appear of the re-

had not the patterns for the regular councily depending upon delicate target had not the patience for the regular souncy depending spon delicate turns of expression and nicer delineations of character. The Spanish samelyof expression and more commentation of entrancer. The openine sensor, with its lexible machinery disgress and complemed fairly so, was much two agrosshie to their tastes

And this is true, although French models were drawn upon far And this is true, attacage a reach answers were than a upon in more frequently than Spanish, in whatever degree the fiber lines more frequency man opening, in wissierer degree one mer mos of the fermer were, at times, obscured in the process. The degree or me normer were, at mines, occourse in the process. The organs and character of the influence of Spanish literature on the drama of England has been much misunderstood. The position taken by or requests that soon ago, to the effect that the connection between yaru, many years ago, to too enect that the commenced reservoir the Spanish and the English drams is far from intimate and that the opaman and the rughan urana is naturous mumase and uses among the elements peculiar to the Spanish drama none can be anange use memoras prominer to see openium usame some one or shown to have been taken over by our own and azimilated to its growth, may be declared to be a position substantially correct. grown, may be updated to be a position substantially outpoor for earliest English play directly traceable to a Spanish source is

I General, Some Account of the Emphis Engs, vol. 1, p. 130 dates the eating of the I General, Some Account of the Emphis Emph, vol. 1, p. 130 dates the eating of this play 1971-72, payry described Emphis sensory of Circley General, so as Empire 1971-74, payry described Emphis Sensory of Circley General, so as Empire 1971-74, payry described Emphis Sensory of Circley General, so as Empire 1971-74, payry described Emphis Sensory of Circley General, so as Empire 1971-74, payry described Emphis Sensory of Circley General, so as Empire 1971-74, payry described Emphis Sensory of Circley General, so as Empire 1971-74, payry described Emphis Sensory of Circley General, so as Empire 1971-74, payry described Emphis Sensory of Circley General, so as Empire 1971-74, payry described Emphis Sensory of Circley General, payry described Emphis Sensory of Circley General Circles Genera ANY 1673-75. PSP77 described another numery of Uriney Guerney, or an install beam specified stages a great white. Popper Disray of Francisco

See done, p. 21 mers s.
Depoles, ed. Scott-Substituty vol. 2, p. 62. 1 Hard, 107 12" b. 558"

Calisto and Melebon an adaptation to the stage of the dramatic novel, Celeating, the work, chiefly if not wholly, of Fernando de Holas and published about 1530. This work has already been described, together with the violent didactic conclusion with which the unknown English adapter made amends for his choice of so romantio a story As is well known, the Spenish scholar. Juan Inia Vives, friend of Sir Thomas More, visited England on the invitation of Henry VIII, who placed him as a reader on rhetorio at Corpus Christi college, Oxford. It has been thought that the English dramatic version of Celestina may have had some relation to Vives and his visit, although he anathematised the Spanish production as a work of infamy in his treatise De Institutions Christianas Fernance. It is somewhat strange that Calisto and Melebea had no successor. However it played its part in relieving the old moral drams of abstractions by the substitution of living human figures in a story of actual life. It was to Italy, not to Spain, that the predecessors of Shakespeare, as well as most of his contemporaries, turned instinctively for romantic material. Spain was an enemy and, as such, was maligned and misunder stoods Yet the figure of Philip, once a sovereign of England, was represented in at least one chronicle history with dignity and a number of dramas, strictly Elizabethan, laid their scene in the penimula and affected to follow annals of Spain. Kyds Spanish Tragedis and its imitation or burlesque, The First Part of Jeronima remain of undiscovered source, and Groenes Alphoness King of Arragon is a composite of the biography of more than one sovereign of that name, as his queen Eleanor of Edward I is an outrareous distortion of one of the most catimable and charitable women that ever ant on the throne of England. The same playwright's Battell of Alcazar and the anonymous Captain Studeley, which deals in part with the same topic, drew on material more nearly approaching the historical. let neither of these, nor Lasts Dominion (although details of the death of the king in that piece have been thought to have been suggested by the death of Philip II), can be traced to any definite Spanish source, much less to anything bearing the title of Spanish literature. Age need we surmise that such lost

³ See ante val. v pp. 89 100, ⁵ On the methal repursance of the two matters in the circumit and reventerable protection, one none examinate paragraphs by Schwill, R., in Remarksky Furnishinger, 51, 1907 vs. 536—232.

Philip II appears as a character in Theorem Haywood's II you have not me. Too have no bodie. A Philip of Spain, now lock, is mentioned by Hendlove in 1802.

The Restoration Drama

productions as Wadeson's Humorous Earle of Gloster with his productions as weathern a Humorous Earse of theseer with an Conquest of Portingall (1800), The Conquests of Spayne b. Conquest of Fortingatt (1000), The Conquests of Spayne of John a Gasest, in which Doy Hathway and Hanghton completed. John a Gazat, in which Day Hathway and Hangaton compared or Chottle and Dekker's Kenge Sobastians of Portingalls (these or Chothe and Dekkers Aimpe Occurrance of Fortinguae (since last two in 1601), were any more closely associated with actual inst two m 1501), were any more closely associated with actual distracture of the pentiumla, however this last may have touched measure or too pennana, nowever ton may may mave unusuous a topic of some contemporary historical interest. Indeed, the on a topic of some contemporary nationical interest. However, we number of English drames up to the death of Elizabeth which number or engines dramas up to the domin or education which can be traced even remotely to a source ultimately Spanish is on oe tracod even remotely to a source ultimately channel as surprisingly small. Marlowes Tambertons was partially drawn empressingly small. Districted a comparations was partently orange from Pedro Mexica Silva de terra lección but this last had from Podro alexias outed as para section out this last new been translated into Italian, French and English (by Thomas poen translated into Italian, French and English (of Inches Fortesche in his Forests or Collection of Hustones) long before Fortescue in his Forests or Unicetion of Histories) long before Mariowe came to write. And, in Shakespeares Two Gentlemen MATIONS CAME to WILLA AND, IN DRAKESPORTE 2 TWO GENERALS OF Verona, the story of Julia and Protons was suggested by that of Felix and Feliamena in the second book of the Diana of the on reals and remembers in the second poor of the 1/1000 of the Portuguese-Spaniard Montemayor But the probable interrention rormguese-opaniaru suomemajur. Dut une promane uncercunon of the new lost play The History of Pelus and Phillomena, acted or the new lest play The History of Science and Shuttowner, across 3 January 1886, should dispose of any theory of a direct Starke-3 January 1086, about dupose or any theory or a cureor consce-speared contact with this much-exploited Spanish source. Other speared contact with this mach-exploited expansis source. Other Shakespearean examples of Spanish influence have been affirmed. contemporare or opening managere may been automating the are the correspondences between Tweel Night and the then are the correspondences perween average angus and the Comadia de los Enguños of Lope de Rueda but both could have Consider the loss Engance of Lope to make our work course there found a common source in Bandello or Possibly in a dramatised found a common source in maintain or passively in a cramatison by an accidenty at filens called Gr. Importants and such remon by an academy as closes called on Asymmetric and soil, too, is the notion that Shakespeare draw on Conda Lacomor for too, is the noticed time consequence area on course resource for the Shrene, a comedy obviously recust from the his running of the course, a control oursettly recast from the carlier anonymous Tanning of a Shring, combined with a plot of earlier anonymous remains of a correct, commons with a piot of fallian extraction, immediately derived from Gascolyne's comedy Issuen extraction, mineralized university from traceingnes comedy.

Supposes: A more interesting suggestion is that which traces the Supposed. A more interesting suggestion is that which traces the sources of The Temper to the fourth chapter of a collection of sources or 18st respect to the routing enapter or a confection of medicare tales, entitled Nocker do Inverse the work of one modificate thing, entitled at possess and area published at Pampions in 16091 Antonio de caiava and new purcumou at rampiona in 1609.
Fitzmaurice-Kelly has given the weight of his authority to a respectful treatment of this source, adding

This processors may be thought to lead colour to the tradition that This prevenence may be throught to lead colour to the tradition that Rakingpears dramatised an episode from Don Quanta-a book that he neight

The first and remain sing in these paragraphs, the writer is industed in Filterance. I for this tool mass sim in these paramytes, the writer is included in Hierarchical College, and related paper the Relations between Specials and Exploit Literature. Kally's more relimating paper. The Relations between Sporman and Empirical Laterature, 1910. See, also, tong motion by Percot., J. de, on third Soyds and a Symmich purellal to 1910. San, Alm, bug main by Farott, J de, on this topic and a Spanish parallel in Lawly Labour. Last 1: the Statement-Catheria, vol. 22v 1900; Pp. 181.—4; and APPER LAWRENCE AND IN COMMANDERS THE STATE AND ADDRESS OF THE STATE ADDRESS

Spanish Personages in English Plays 127

scally have read in filleditor's translation published in 1612, or periarys, even in the measurement which Shelium had kept by that for some four or five surst say rate, the following entry occurs under the data 1635 in the register of the Shallower' company—The History of Cardenio by Mr. Yhelcher and Shalsowert, 524.1

As to Spanish personages interspersed through Elizabethan drama. it has been well said. They were either arrogant, boastful, pompously affected or cruel, sheer caricatures, in a word, drawn with an unfriendly pen Middleton's Laxarillo in Blurt Master Constable (a sad perversion of that delightful rescal, his namesake of Tormes), and Jonson's ridiculous carresture in the pretended Don Diego of The Alchemes are sufficient illustrations of this? As to the boasters and bullies of the playwrights, Bobadill, Captain Tucca, Ancient Pistol and the rest, there was no need to bespeak them in Spain. For such traits of the kind as were not derived from observation can show a clear literary descent from the Miles Glorioms of Plantus. That Shakespeere contrived to keep his Don Armado human, as well as absurdly lofty and valuelorious. is partly due to the fact that Armado is the portrait of an actual mad Spanlard, known as fantastical Monorcho, who haunted the London of his day And Armado, too, had had his immediate literary model in Lyly's contribution. Bir Thomas in Endusion. to the Plantine line of descent just mentioned.

Towards the end of the reign of king James I Spanish liters ture became better known in England, and we naturally look for the offect of this on English drama. But this relation was still general and ostablished largely through French and Italian translation, and it is easy to make too much of it. The plays of Beaumont and Fletcher have been alleged to disclose more especially that contact between the dramas of the two mations which some scholars have striven anxiously to establish and this, notwithstanding the accurate statement of Dryden as to dramatic plots that "Denument and Fletcher had most of theirs from Spanish novels". Some seventeen of the fifty two plays commonly attributed to Bosumont and Fletcher have been traced, in a greater or loss measure of indebtedness, to Spanish literature.

U. Pr. 21, 22,

⁸ Underhill, J. O., Spanish Literature in the Z. sland of the Tudors. 1989. p. 837.
⁸ Millisteen which have had his Lazarille in English, long eline translated by David Bardwal and printed in 1978. There is see reason for construct that Bon James have Spanish; his few allusions to Don Quinnet and the Spanish phrases of Phe Alcherist to the contrary newthelestanding. Bee Schortill, p. 4. p. p. 813, 412.
⁹ Profess to An Xivening a Long, Works of Dryden, ed. Bonti-Schnickery well, 112, 213.

Eighteen others remain unidentified as to source, and some of these disclose a content and a manner not unlike the ruling traits of the drama of Spain. If then, we consider the almost incredible mass of the writings of Lope de Vega (to mention him only), unread by English and even by Spanish scholars, and further keep in mind that those conversant with Spanish drams are not always conversant with English and vice versa, it would be rush to affirm that the last word has been said on a topic as yet not seriously opened. Our present information, however may be set forth as follows, although, with regard to the plays on Sponish subjects attributed to Beaumont and Fletcher it should be premised that most of them were composed at a date precluding the possibility that Beaumont had a hand in them! Correntes was Fletcher's favourite Spanish author and he seems to have been sequalated solely with his prose. From the Novelas Exemplares, the English poet drew the major plots of The Chances, The Queens of Corenth, The Feire Maids of the Inns and Loves Pilgremage, with the underplot of Rule a Wyle And have a Wife as well. The Customs of the Country is derived from the romance of Persiles a Sinssaveds, the last work to come from the great Spaniard's hand. As to Don Outpote, apart from possible suggestions for certain episodes of Beaumont's Empht of the Burning Pasils' the plot of The Concembe, an enhance of The Double Marriage and a personage of The Propheterse have been traced by various critics to the same immortal romanes. Besides Cerrantes, Fletcher drew on Lone de Veza for his Pilores, on Juan de Flores for Women pleas'd and on Gonzalo de Cospedes for The Spanish Curate and The Mand on the Mill and not one of these originals is a play nor need Fletcher have read a word of Spanish to have become acquainted with them for all had been travulated into French or English and were readily accessible to his hand! About two only of the Fletcherian plays has any question on these points arisen. Loves Oure, first printed in the falls of 1647 but commonly dated back to the early years of king James, has been referred to a comedy by Guillen de Castro, written at

¹ Of, earth, appendix to red. vs. chap. v. On this topic, see the same weeks of Scientiff, s.e. pp. 617—634; and the Scientiff, s.e. pp. 617—634; and the Scientiff duction, by March, H. S., to his ode of this play Yele Starles to Employ, 1904.
2 So, on this topic, Fitzmanties Edity produce to Scientiff the Occupant, Keepyd.
Collegated Sci., Manchery Christop, 1369, and Targe, Scientific the dam and taley.

Thester 1992.

He the recent of this sthips, in the present uniter's Alicebethan Drame, vol. 11, p. 218.

so late a date as to make it quite impossible that Fletcher could have seen it! Again, Fletchers Island Princesse has been referred to a source in the writings of the younger Arganola, not translated out of Spanish at such a date that Fletcher could have seen it! But these matters are still under discussion, and, on this particular subject, we may take refuge in the judgment of Fitmaurice-Kelly who writes 'Suffice it to say that, at the present stage, the balance of probabilities is against the view that Fletcher know Spanish'.

If we turn to other dramatists, we find an occasional contemporary of Fletcher following in his footsters. The Spanish Gipsie, a trackemedy by Middleton and William Rowley is made up of an effective combination of two stories of Corventes. La Fuerza de la Sangre and La Getanilla, Rowley collaborated, too, with Fletcher in The Maid in the Mill, a comedy based on a story of Gonzalo de Cospedea, translated by Leonard Digges and called Gerardo, the Unfortunate Spaniard. Rowley's own powerful tracedy Alls Lost by Luck draws on Spanish story though his precise source remains problematic. Once more, A Very Woman, by Massinger, is derived from a story of the Novelas Exemplares. The same dramatist a Resegudo is said to be based on Cervantea a Los Ballos de Arnel, and similarities have been traced between the same two authors in The Futall Dozerv and the interlude. El Viejo celosa. Moreover, it is said that neither of these Spanish pieces was translated in Massinger's lifetime, although this is not to be considered certain. We may not feel sure that a Spanish play has actually influenced an English play by direct borrowing. until we reach Shirley who, on credible authority is reported to have utilised El Castigo del Pansenus of Tirso de Molina in The Opportunitie and Lope de Vera a Don Lope de Cardona in The Young Admirall. Fitamaurice-Kelly sceptically observes, oven as to these examples 'a minute demonstration of the extent of Shirley's borrowines would be still more satisfactory

The last two volumes of Doddey's Old Plays contain several dramas of the restoration which are Spanish in scene. Of these, The Robelium by Thomas Rawlins seems wholly famiful with its bere dispulsed as a tallor and its crowded and improbable in-

* * ***

I Sticke to Herrie Archir vol. 2002, p. ETL.

[&]quot; Fee the same in vol. am, pp. 277 ff.

^{*} The Relations between Spenish and Kaplish Liberature, pp. 25, 25.

On the topic, see the edition of the play by Suck, C. W., Publications of the University of Franchication, 1910 vol. 2011, p. 70.

The Relations, as above, p. 22.

cident. The Marriage Night, printed in 1664 by Heavy viscount Falkland is an abler drame, reproducing, however in more than one fortible passage, personages and situations of the earlier one fortunes passage, personages and musicanase or one mariner Ellimbethan drama. Both of these were written before the closing of the theatres, but it is doubtful if the latter was over sected. of the pro-restoration dramas of Spanish plot are The Parsons Other pro-reasonable different and of Oalderon a Dama Dacade, and Pendano sociale America de Mendos and Conseder of Antonio de Mendosa 1 With Takes Adventures of Free Hours (written in 1629) and Digby's Eterra, or The Worst Not always True (written in 1000) and 1007). recordinguestionable examples of the immediate adaptation of Spanish drames to the English stage. This is not the place in or opament traines to too reigness stage. This is not too prace in the fortes of the Spanish stage, the moral purpose of Aharcon, the brilliancy and wit of Time de Mollina the purpose of American use orthogon and wis of Arise of Storing use attention use of Lope de Vega, the clarify of thought and lofty. saying scientist or rapid to room too castry or thought and tour surface of the Spanish dramatics. Both senument or canceror, greatest or the openion uranisation for the compeller just mentioned are favorable specimens of the the contents has mentanded are institution specialism in the popular contents de capa y capada, invented by Lope de Vega popular constants to capte y espants, inventor by stope to vega.

Two ladies a gallant and his friend their loves, a jealous brother I wo series, a galante and our irrend, most irrend a Joseph devices or a difficult father with the attendant acreants of all parties mistake, accelent, intrigue and involvement bosom touched and mistate, accelent, intrigue and involument, bosons touched and bosons righted—such is the universal receive of the consoly of noncer regulers—such as the summariant recommend one beauty to close and swort. As to these adaptors of the species to England, Goorge Digby out of Bristol had played no unimportant part as trough tright cast to through the purpose to minimum present two ambanesdor of king James I at Hadrid, where he translated two cher comedies of Calderon Session No Stempts to Por as Carta, other customes of Castillon Sentes are Observed to Markon the bad served at Markon nor unguan to state of the control and the control of the control Charles, who is said to have energe to Los Empedos de Seis Herrar (now and greed to Antonio Coello and not, as formerly to (Alderon) as an excellent deign for an English play? Element to tenure were than a translation, stiff, formal and, while by no means wanting had a standard, but to the said, while by no manage in action, protested if not chargeable with repetitions. It was in section, provided in the total reason with representation of printed until 1667 and we have no record of the performance of ft. Takes Adventures of Five Hours is a better play and as rewritten, was sufficiently adapted to the conditions of the English stage to gain a descreed success. Into the relations of Take gray to the coming berole drams of Divides, we cannot bero enter. Its importance, despite its Castilian gravity and some timed coulded, second in this respect, likely to be exaggerated: So, too, although important as the earliest play of Spanish plot acted after the restoration, it is too much to claim for The Adventures the 'reintroduction of a type of the drama of intrigue 'which, from that day to this, has morer left the English stage." Dryden attacked The Adventures, but Pepys declared when all is done, [it] is the best play that over I read in my life."

Plante to Analysis and Querry per safe purer printed in 1870 and 1871.

Littleway Expenses, inchession forms that a 844

The coffers of Spanish drams, thus opened, continued to afford English playwrights their treasures. Dryden's Rival-Ladies and An Evening's Love or the Mock Astrologer have been referred to Spanish sources the last is Calderon by way of Cornellia. Dryden's earliest dramatic effort, The Wild Gallant, has also been thought to be of Spanish origin. But this is an error referable to a migroading of the prologue, the source is certainly English and doubtless. Dryden's own invention' With Sir Thomas St. Serie's Turmo s Wiles, or the Coffee House, founded on Moreto s No puede ser, the earl of Orrery's Gurman and Mrs Behn's Dutch Lover and The Rover, we complete the list of dramas in the earlier years of the restoration which have been alleged to be of Spanish plots Crowne a Sir Courtly Nice is a later comedy said, likewho, to have been suggested by the taste of king Charles and derived from Moreto's No pueds ser and 'the most amusing scenes of Wycherley's comedy The Gentleman Dancing-master, have been assigned to a source in Calderon's El Marsiro de Dancar More commonly however, Smalsh influences filtered into England through the drama of France. It may be doubted whother any 'Spanish plot of Dryden exhibits more than an indirect origin of this nature. In later decades, this was almost invariably the case. Thus, Steeles Lynny Lover The Perplexed

³ See Chibl, C. O., in Holern Language Notes, rol. xxx, 1901, p. 106, and the magalilabed thasis of Gaw A., on this play 1006, in the Elevary of the University of Pennsylvania. CL cots, p. 18 note S.

¹ Presse, M., Spenich Sufficence on English Literature, 1905, p. 251.

Preye's Diary, oil Wheather IL R. roll v p. 403.

Deplot's works. It he year author's let To be so inappend by a Spanish plot, not with a Spanish plot as often queeds, refer to his rivalry with Tabr's Advances as to the source of his own play. Just below to affirm a Thin play is English of the growth year own. This point is made by Gav in his threst, referred to in a not above.

The Datch Lover is criercal by Langishine in a Spanish story. The Roser is an adaptation of Killigree's Thomass. For both of these, see below p. 141 of this real factors. The False Count, 1612, is mosther play by Mrs Boths of Spanish type. Langishin Sail a kint is it. herears horseend from Millian's Love Deviations.

eldent. The Marriage Night, printed in 1064 by Henry viscount Falkland is an abler drams, reproducing, however in more than one forcible passage, personages and situations of the earlier Elizabethan drama. Both of these were written before the closing of the theatres, but it is doubtful if the latter was ever acted. Other pro-restoration dramas of Spanish plot are The Persons Wedding, which Killigrow had of Oalderon a Dama Damado and Fandawos translation of two comodies of Autonio de Mendors! With Tukes Adventures of Five Hours (written in 1662) and Digby a Elvira, or The Worst Not always True (printed in 1667). To reach unquestionable examples of the immediate adaptation we read unquessioned examples of the months and the place in or opening uranum to the carginal angle than a reve who proved which to dilate on the glories of the Spanish stage, the moral wanni so unatio on the Bearine of the Openium awage, the more parpose of Alarcon, the brilliancy and wit of Time de Moline, the happy fertility of Lope de Vega, the charity of thought and lofty nepty terminy or noise up role, the county or monger and sons sentiment of Calderon, greatest of the Spanish dramatists. Both the conedies just mentioned are farourable specimens of the popular consections de capa y capada, invented by Lope de Vega. popular conceuns as copes y capsus, inventor by rope as voga. Two ladies, a gallant and his friend, their lovers, a joslom brother or a difficult father with the attendant accrants of all parties or a culticult father with too attendant servants or all parties mistake, accident, intrigue and involvement, honour touched and honour righted—such is the universal recipe of the consoly of clock and sword. As to those adapters of the species to England, George Digity earl of Bristol, bad played no unimportant part as usoupe rough cert or retains, new peryon no unumpersant part as ambagander of king James I at Madrid, where he translated two contamentary or aims source a so manning where he scanning who other correction of Calderon besides No Scapers to Peor as Cherto, other consumes or tainering occurse its occupre so their so thereo, the original of Everta. Sir Samuel Tuke had served at Marston top outgrast or corpers. Our common runs our secretary management and followed the prince into artic. He was much favoured by moor and tomored one prince more came. Me was much incomes of Charles, who is said to have suggested Les Empelos de Seis Horas (now angled to Antonio Coello and not, as formerly to Calderon) toos assigned to Automo Ocean and not, as connerty to Carnette. as an extension occupy for an angular peay. Differ a man more than a translation, all formal and, while by no means wanting in action, protracted if not chargeable with repetitions. It was not printed until 1007 and we have no record of the performance of it. Takes Adventures of Fire Hours is a botter play and as rewritten, was sufficiently adapted to the conditions of the as resulting, was summered y mapped to see consulting or see English stage to gain a deserved success. Into the relations of Takes play to the coming heroic drams of Dividen, we cannot here enter Its importance, despite its Castilian gravity and some rimed coupleds, somes, in this respect, likely to be exag gerated. So, too, although important as the earliest play of Spanish plot acted after the restoration, it is too much to claim for The Adventures the relutroduction of a type of the drams of intrigue which, from that day to this, has never left the English stage. Dryden attacked The Adventures, but Pepps declared when all is done, [It] is the best play that ever I read in my life.

Protes de d'expluse and Querre per sale gaurer princiel la 1870 and 1871. Frience on Arthyron Ann (merry per som genery printed in 1870 and 1871.
Filteraction Ently J., Literactory Expansio, industion Darroy late a 446

The coffers of Spanish drams, thus opened, continued to afford English playwrights their treasures. Dryden's Rival-Ladies and An Keening's Loce or the Mock Astrologer have been referred to Spanish sources the last is Calderon by way of Cornellie. Dryden's earliest dramatic effort, The Wild Gallant, has also been thought to be of Spanish origin. But this is an error, referable to a misreading of the prologue the source is certainly English and doubtless. Dryden's own invention' With Sir Thomas St Serie's Taruso's Wiles, or the Coffee House, founded on Moreto a No made ser, the earl of Orrery's Gurman and Mrs Behn a Dutch Lover and The Rover we complete the list of dramps in the earlier years of the restoration which have been alleged to be of Spanish plots Crownes Ser Courtly Nice is a later comedy said. Ilkewise, to have been suggested by the taste of king Charles and derived from Moreto's No puede eer, and the most amusing scenes of Wycherley's comedy, The Gentleman Danesno-master. have been assigned to a source in Calderon s El Maestro de Danzar More commonly, however, Spanish influences filtered into England through the drama of France. It may be doubted whether any 'Spanish plot of Dryden exhibits more than an Indirect origin of this nature. In later decades, this was almost invariably the case. Thus, Steeles Lanna Lover, The Pernlexed

¹ See Calld, G. G., in Matern Lemynope Notes, vol. 212, 1904, p. 188, and the mapshillshed thesis of Onv A., on this play 1908, in the Elevary of the University o. Pennyirratio, C. Leave p. 18 note 2.

¹ River, M. Speeck Sylvenes on Daylish Liberature, 1900, p. 251.

² Pryyr's Diary, ol. Wheatley H. B. vol. v p. 403.

Dryken's works, It is your author's let To be entangued by a Spanish plot, not with a Spanish plot as eften queeds, refer to the trivity with Take a decenture, act to the second of the way hey. Just below the editions, The play is English the other play is English the provint your own. This point is made by Gaw in his thesis, referred to in a note above.

The Doteh Lover is referred by Langbaine to a Spanish viery. The Recer is an abstration of Killigere's Thomson. For both of these, one belows, 151 of 11th reference. The Faire Count, 1572, in suction Flag by Mr. Buch of Spanish type. Langbaine finds a hint in it, however, borrowed from Moldrech Lee Preference Ridsoulo.

Lower of Mrs Centilive and Colley Cibber's She Would and She Would Not are derivative plays and only remotely Spanish.

We may summarise what has been said on a subject of considerable difficulty as follows. Spanish literary influences on the drama in Tudor times were slight and confined, almost entirely, to an occasional plot, derived, as a rule, through some foreign intermediary In the reign of James I, Beaumont and Fletcher Massinger and William Rowley alone among dramatists of note, drew on Spanish sources for their plays and, though the question cannot be regarded as definitely settled, it seems likely that their assurees lay wholly in fiction, translated into other and, to them, more familiar languages of the continent or into English. It was in the reign of king Charles I, that Spanish drams for the first time came into a closer touch with the English stage. That touch was closest at the restoration, when the cavalier returned with his foreign luggage and the taste of the king conspired with the experiences of his courtiers to foster many experiments. But Spanish influence was soon collinsed by that of France, alded by the strong national spirit that prolonged the influence of Joneon and his contemporaries for generations after their decease.

In turning to a consideration of the influences of French literature on the drame of the restoration, it is customary to give unusual weight to the example of the romans de longues haleine, those extraordinary expressions in protracted hyperbole of ideal conduct, sentiment and conversation, with which the finer spirits of the days of Louis XIV sought to elevate and ennoble social life! But, as a matter of fact, much of this influence was already in full flood far back in the reign of king Charles L as the cult of Piatonic love, about 1633, and the ideals of love and honour which it fostered are alone sufficient to attest. To what extent the ideals of this one time fashionable oult may be surmised to have persisted to affect appreciably the conduct of the returning exiles is a question for the historian of social conditions. On the drama, such ideals had a marked, if superficial, effect. The life of the court of king Charles II, was, at best, a course replica of that of Versailles and the heroic drams, the roots of which lie deeper than in the supersoil of romence, reproduced mostly externals, grandiloquence of language, loftiness of sentiment, incredible 2 For a list of restoration plays referred to the influences of the remanant of the Sendinys and other like writers, see Ward, vol. 111, p. 200 note.

⁵ See, as to this, especially D'Avenaul's apotheous of Pictonie leve in his grand masses, The Traple of Leve, his Leve and Heneur both 1634, and his Pictonial Towns 155.

valour with courtesy and honour drawn and twisted into an impossible code. More immediate in its effects was the con temporary French stage in which much of the literature of exaggerated sentiment was reproduced by forgotten authors, who live now only in the entire which their extravagance inspired in the commonsense of Bollenu. But the subject of this influence. and of that of the classicism of Cornellie and Racine in particular, as well as the use of the rimed couplet in the English drama, and its relations to the horoic play are treated elsewhere our concern here is with comedy1

It was in 1653 that Molière, after his long apprentication in the provinces, brought out his L Etourdi in Paris and, from that date onward to his death, just twenty years later he remained the mester and the example of the most brilliant comedy of modern times. Molitres earlier work thus corresponds in point of time. with the latest years of exile, when many Englishmen of rank were amming themselves in Paris and peculiarly open to lighter impressions from the idleness of their lives. No one foreign anthor has been so plundered by English playwrights as Molière, and his humano snirit, his naturalness, adaptability and dramatic aptitude stood the borrowers in good stead, in recalling them from the intricacion of Spanish intrigue and the wearleame repetition at second hand of the humours of Ben Jonson. That the finer qualities of Molière, his verve, his buoyancy case and success of plot, and sure characterisation, escaped his English imitators is not to be denied for, anart from the circumstance that few of them were men of more than mediocre parts, the centus of Molière towers above the imitation of any age. A list of the borrowings of restoration comedy from the drama of Molière and his con temporaries would unduly hurden this page. D'Avenant, Dryden. Sedley, Wycherley Vanbruch, Crowne and Shadwell all owe debta of plot, character design and dialogue to French comedy and, even where the debt may not be specifically ascertainable, the CL outs, pp. 146 and 18 ff. and part, thep. vol. At to these inflorment, it is well to remember that translation and adaptation from the Prenck by no means set in, for the first time, with the restoration. Apart from the early direct influence of the Seneran Garaier on Kyl, Grerille, Alexander and others, and the piare drawn from French sources by Firtcher and his group, which it is not portional here to resount, Mr William Lower had translated the Polyrects of Cornellie in 1635 and Recore the year after; Carlell, his Miracilies about the same date and agreed persons of herour Waller Belley Godnishin and the earl of Darset, were hary with a translation of his People afterwards sompleted by Mrs Katherine Philips, the Matchiese Orinda, ensourced by lord ferrory and precised at Dabila in February 1662. (She also transtone of the play the method of its conduct and the conception of its personages declare the dominant influence of France. To mention only some examples, Mollivier supplied secures, personages or suggestions to D'Avenent's Ployhouse to be Les, Drydens An Breesing a Love, Amphiryon and Sir Martin Mar-All, to Sedley's Mulberry Garden, Wyrheley's Country Wife, The Plain Dedic Sindwell's Sulles Lovers and The Miser and Orowne a The Country Wit and The Emplus Freer while Cornelle, Racine, Quinault were levided on by the playwrights just manned and by others beddes.

The influence of French opers on the like productions in England is a matter of less certainty. The attribution of D'Avenant's experiments in musical drams to direct influences, either from Italy or from France, seems dubious, if not funciful, if his previous experience as a writer of masones for the court of king Charles I is taken into account. Although Italian opera had been introduced into France so far back as 1845 and 'the first French opera, a pastoral, had been performed some fourteen years later this by-product of the drams was not thrust into general amentance and nopularity until the days of the celebrated partnership between Lulli, the king's musician, and the librettist Quinault, the first opers of whose joint effort. Orderes and Hermione, was acted in 16731 Meanwhile, how ever Cambert, componer of the first French opera, had written his Possons, the carliest opers heard by the Parislan public and when his rivalry with Lulli for the control and management of the opera in Paris ended in the latter's triumph. Cambert came over to London and, as leader of one of king Charles a companies of musicians, took his part in the introduction of French opers into England? Cumbert's associate in his operatic labours was the abbe Pierre Perrin, who had supplied the words for the pastoral as well as for Pomone. Another product of this partner ship was Arume, on Le Mariage de Bacchus and an opera of that title was some in French at the Theatre Royal in Drury lane in January 1674 An English version of this opera, nublished simultaneously with the French version at the period of production, reads Ariadas, or The Harriage of Bacchus, an Opera

³ On these subjects, see Parry Rev C. R. R., The Orderd Hestery of Music, vol. 111, p. 255 and Lardin, H., Le Designe Proposite, pp. 80, 100. Lee Pilles de Fainner et de Deschie volts which Leid special kin Opens in the new Yangshright in the previous Reveniere in Securities at Sinite matry than a ballet, a special of materialization for materialization for proposition of materialization.

The Capter I Housey of Music vol. 12, p. 236.

or a Vocal Representation first composed by Monsieur Pilerre] Merrinl. Now put into Musick by Monsieur Grabut, Master of his Majesty's Munick. And it is further said that Cambert super intended the production1 Whatever the solution of this tangle, English musicians now took up the writing of opera, Matthew Locke staging his Psyche in 1676 and Purcell, Dido and Acreas, his first opera, in 1690. Dryden a imitations of French opera, of which Albion and Albanius, 1085, is a typical example, came later and so did the tasteless adaptations of earlier plans to operatic treatment, Shakespeare's Tempest and Fletcher's Propheterse, for example, done to music, often of much beauty and effectiveness, by the famous musician of his day, Henry Purcult. The opera according to Dryden, is 's poetical tale, or fiction, represented by vocal and instrumental music, adorned with scenes, machines, and dances , and he adds, somewhat to our surprise. the supposed persons of this musical drama are generally super natural. Unquestionably the opera lent itself, like the heroic play, to sumptuous costume and ingenious devices in setting and stage scenery and it is not to be denied that, then as now, its devotees set their greatest store on the music and on the fame of individual singers

I has no great admirer may Baint-Kirvetunch, 'of consoline in moster such as novadays are in request. I consider I am not displaced with their inspulledures; the machines have something that is corprising the mode in some places is chamming; the whole togethor seems wonderful. But it is very teddom, for whore the mind has so little to do, there the sense must of necessarie its naturals.

A discussion of the history of Italian opers in England would be out of place here, since it came first into England with the new century That men of the taste and judgment of Dryden and Purcell in their respective arts should have lent their talents to the composition of those 'old mediers of poetry and music only proves the strength of contemporary fashbors in arts

³ Laurence, W. J. Early French Players in England, Anglia, vol. xxxix, pp. 81 82, and Nature et Thoman. Les Origines de l'Opéra Français, pp. 803 ff.

Prices to Albies and Albieste, Work of Drybra, al. Secti Salatabary val. vz., p. 233. Compres, also, the definition of Salatabary scales and medical process of Salatabary scales and medical process of Salatabary scales and the section, opening on the section of Salatabary scales of Salatabary Sal

b Our thoughts was more upon the munician than the here in the opera: Leigh Cavalla, and Cool are still present to our imagination. Baptir is a handred times more thought of than Theorem or Cadanza. Field, pp. 53, 57.

But it was well that, before these general French influences had made themselves felt, a new dramatist, also schooled in France, began in his productions to give expression to the contemporary began in ma productions to give expression to the contemporary ideal of polite society and to adapt to the changed conditions of the moment the most persistent form of drams, the council of the moments are most parameters form of urana, the connect of the earlier life of Sir George Etherege, we know nautors. Vi too parior the w oir trenge concrege, we save next to nothing. It has been inferred from an allusion by Dryden, near to mounting. It has been interred from an autonom by 1070 on, that Etherege was born in 1634 and, by means of other inferences, that be came of an old Oxfordshire family. It seems unlikely that that no came or an out of contraction of the contraction of the cap of the ca convergency with French and the ways of the French capital point contensuoly with residu and the ways of the record capital points to a long solourn in Paris. The first work of Etherege was The to a long sojourn in yarra. The most work of nearestage was a me Constant Revenge, or Lone in a Tub. It was published in 1664 comical ascence or come as a rac. It was parameter in room and may have been produced for the first time late in the previous and may have been produced for the mast time rate in the profuse and immediate success and Februage found Jour Line comedy was an innerview success and numerical results. This introduced to the wife and the fops of the town, Etheroge took his place in the select and dissolute circle of Rochester Doract and Sodley On one occasion, at Epsom, after tossing in a blanket certain fiddless who refused to play Rochester Etherego and other boom companions so to pay morner hungers and orner toon companions so aliminhed the watch that they left one of their number thrust sammanou une waten once stop sote one or store manuser enteres through with a pike and were fain to abscond. Etherego married carough while pass and were taken to attend the for no better a nortine, it is not certain when, and, apparently for no neuter reason, was knighted. On the death of Rochester he was for same time the Protector of the beautiful and talented actress. some time, the protector of the beautiful and takened actress.

Mrs Barry * Ever indolent and procrastinating, Pubercee allowed ner parry pror municus and procrasmanus princing anomor Sac rour yours to capse before an more venture into comeany one Woodd V 536 Could, 1668, is a better play than The Confeed Honoryc, and such was the popular expectation of it, when prosteerede, and such was the popular expectation of it, when pro-duced, that, as Pepps tells us, though he and his wife were there outcon, that, as repys came as, mongai no same ms same serie source by two octock, there were one thousand people put back that oy are o carea, mere were one consumer proper per carea man partially common may room in the pit. Unnappary success was partially the actors were out of humour occasion, occasios, and repyra too actors were out or number and had not their parts perfect. Etherego now doubled his and man not their parts perfect. Concretes now nonneced that in the form in th 1670, doubtless stung by a deserved rebuke in Rochestor's Scauon to to, anomalous scape by a anserven resource in mocuremer a common of the Poets, produced his hast and bost comedy The Man of of the Focus, produced his min and none content for man of Mode, or Sir Ropling Flutter Of the later fours of Etherege, Deplete to Ethersky. The World of the Outrys Ethersky ad, Varley 1800, p. 400. I Depois to Ethersky, Yas Forks of the University Ethersky at, Yorky 1880, p. 448.

The particulars of these passages in the his of Fibrings will be found in Metally and the contract when the contract was a second or the contract with the found in Metally and the contract was a second or the contract with The particular as some passages as one are or country; thely of the post, Florer Reliefer, vol. 117 1801, Pp. 63-71.

we know much, owing to the existence of one of his Letterbooks, kept by his secretary at Ratibon, where he was English resident from 1685 to a time early in 1689 From certain allusions, Etherege has been supposed to have held similar posts elsewhere, in Breden and, possibly in Turkey But, of this, there is no proof. The particulars of his life in an uncongenial diplomatic exile need not concern us. His correspondence, which included letters to and from Dryden, is full of life and gossip about the wits of his time, all of it expressed with the galety, candour and fopplish wit of which Etherege, in his plays, is the acknowledged master Etherege is supposed to have died, about 1690, at Paris. Handsone, witty brave, profligate though he was, and, perhaps, as abeen charitably suggested, having but a weak head for wine, the story that 'Eir George Etheredge died by falling down stairs in a drunken fit, rosts solely 'on the authority of a friend of the family repeated by Oldys'

Different oninions have been broached as to the place of Etherere in the history of restoration drams, although no two much at variance can be held by those familiar with the spirit, galety and brilliancy of the prose dialogue of his comedies. The discovery of more than one copy of an edition of The Comical Revence, dating 1664, has brought Etherege's claim to the introduction of rimed couplets as a regular dramatic metre on the restoration stage into direct competition with that of Orrery's Although Etherego abandoned this innovation in his other two comedies, wisely writing them in proce, in which he is at his best, this fashion of distinguishing more serious and elevated scenes and passages of a comedy by couching them in heroic complets was continued by certain of his fellows! But the authority of the writer who has urged the above-mentioned claim on behalf of Etherege, further invites us to sesume that he 'loitered long enough in Paris after the first rush of the royalists bomewards 'for Molière to be revealed to him, and that, with a new idea thus formed of what comedy ought to be, he returned to England and 'founded English comedy as it was successively understood by Congresse. Goldsmith and Sheridan ' Now, indubitably, Etherege had none of his harry, conscienceless art from Jouson. With the making up

Works of Etheredge, ed. Verity &, introduction, p. xeril.
 Bos Gosse, B. Sir George Etheredge, in Revenuenth Contrary Studies ed. 1277

p. M.L. where the relations of Etheraga, in this respect, to Dryden's The Louis Ladios and D'Avennet's Slope of Shades are discussed. As to Orrory's claim, see note abop, 1, p. 18 and note 2.

Note more arrackelly Sallery's Mallerry Gorden.

Once of my Off Set.

The Restoration Drama of his personages out of changes on a single humour, strained and on an personages one or commerce on a single number, secured and conducted. Etherage discarded any pretensions to the knitting communes, extranely uncarried any precessions to the amount to get the also discarded literary as well as dramatic togrouper or a prot. He also obscured intersty as well as orangement constructiveness, and it is not impossible that Mollère pointed constructiveness, and it is not impressing that atomics parameters that the way to a freedom from rule which Etherege present to nim the way to a recorden from rule which believes pressure to the less in his nonce. Due the morthand fashion of Jonson's humours, than in a econowing the mornional manned or Johnson's minimums, man in a cortain natural gentles whereby he was able to put upon the stage corrain medical genum whosteny no was some to put upon one stage a picture, very little heightened, of the rolatering, recklers kilea passure, very many magnitudes, or one evaluating receives once and licentiforances that actually characterized the brilliant, noss and accuracy contraction of the man of quality Space can fight at need with spirit and verse, but whose customary who can ugus as need with sport and verre, but whose consciously occupation is the pursuit of pleasure without dignity and without occupation to the furnities of pressure without engines and without reflection —this is Etherege's thome it is his very self, to courting in Sir Frederick Frollicke, in Courtail and Freedom, two curring in our recurrick requires, in courtain and received, and bonest gentlemen of the town, in Site Would if Site Could and nonest granteness or the town, in one wome w one was and in the masterly circle of tops. Dorlinant, Medley Bellair and in the manory cities or tops—norman, alousy behave and fifty polyney flutter—each one of them equally the man of mode. Nature, you know says Etherego of himself, intended me for Nature, you know says Etherege or anneau, intension me nor an idle fellow and gave me passion and qualities fit for that an sure remow and gave me passion and quanties in for max-blessed calling but fortune has made a changeling of me and bessed causing our fortune that many a management of the model of forces me to set up for a fop of business ! As to the necessity forces me to see up for a mp or outsides. As to the women or histories, know are manuscause, calcaragaily, siley as the men and as bold in their intrigues and amount there is no coe men and as tout in their intergrees and amounts there as no maldons blinch among them. They are such, in a word, as the restoration rakes and roses know them Attention has been called to Etherage's graphic touches of attention has been cannot to becomes a graphic reacted on the gay little west-end that knew scene, cosmine and place in too gay must wear-color than the is at home in Mulberry garden, a place of public resort and entertainment, with bordered alloys and adjacent arbours in and emercanded, what conserve anys and supercons around a which to cat syllabuls and to carry on hazardom filtrations like those of Mistress Arians and Mistress Gatty two manging run-Arays from chaperonage or sgale, in the shop of Mrs Trinket analys from comparisonage or again, in one another are are accounted in the New Exchange, a species of Areade, whither laddes go in the Aca Licenses, a species of Aranic, whither haves go as a play or in the Park, and where gallants scent their cyclerows and pay or in the care, and where gammes are their eventual and parings with a little ensures of frances or featuring, as did and learnings and a little cases on oranges or Josephine, as our contail value valuing for any contavour. Due to supernaute quality of Ritherene as a writer of consedy is the case and natural quanty or nuncrego as a writer or councy is the case and material ness of his proce dialogue, which, almost uniformly withy and, at 1 Letterbeek mader date 8 March 1888, quoted by Ocean, Sepantemak Contrary, p. 506.

times, really brilliant, is seldom overdone and unsuited to his personages, as is not infrequently the case with Congrere. The erry frivality of Etherege disarms criticism. Who would break a butterfly on the wheel? For the time, English men and women in good saciety had lapsed into an excess of gallantry, enjoying their ong with incorrigible frankness and obusdons, and avowing their enjoyment with incorrigible flippancy and abamelessness. In Etherege, comedy for the moment, touched nature once more, for such was nature in the society of the restoration. Congrere is remote and studied in comparison, for he wrote of these things when in actual life they had come to be mitigated by a measurable return of public manners to healthler conditions white, as to Etheridan, equally a disciple of Etherege, his consedies in fact only perpetuated a picture of ille that had long since ceased to be much more than a brilliant tradition of the stage.

The closest immediate follower of Etherere in comedy is Sir Charles Sedley whose earliest comedy The Mulberry Garden. 1868, le based, in part, on Molière e L'École des Marus and le written in that mixture of proce and herole couplets which Etherene introduced in his Comical Revence. An intimate in the chosen circle of the king Sedley was as famous for his wit as he was notorious for the profilmer of his life. Nevertheless. be appears to have been a capable man of affairs and, as a writer gained a deserved reputation alike for the clearness and case of his proce and for a certain poetle gift, more appreciable in his occasional leries than in the serious parts of his dramas. The Mulberry Garden, no bod comedy in its lighter scenes, is bettered in Bellamira, or the Mestress, 1687, which, though founded on the Ennuclus of Terence, presents a lively if coursely realistic. picture of the reckless purmit of pleasure of Sedleys day The Grambler, printed in 1702, is little more than an adaptation of Le Grondeur of Brueys and Palaprat. Sodley's tragedies call for no more than the barest mention. His Anlony and Gleopatra. 1667 reprinted as Beauty the Conqueror, is among the feeblest as it is the latest, of heroic plays written in couplets. His Tyrant King of Orcie, 1702, is merely a revision of Henry Killigrams Pallantus and Endora, little amended in the process'

With examples such as these among writers who pretended to gentle manners and birth, and with Dryden descending to the dramatic stews, it is not surprising to find lesser writers and

⁴ On this bople, see Generi, m.s. vol. 2, 3. Ltd. and License M., in deelin, vol. arren, 59, 180-18.

į

stage backs throwing decency to the winds and substituting above sage naces arrowing occomy to the sinus and successfully see (who died in 1681) is a familiar example of the popular actor (who died in 1001) is a maintair cassilate or one papers assu-farmed playwright. Out of a couple of the comedies of Mollère, butchered in the process, be compounded The Dead Lady or The Further made Physician, 1860 in Saway the Soot or The And I METTER MERGE I RESERVED, 1000 III CORNEY ONE COOK, OF A RE-A country of the coursest 100% circumio as runsed to the circumstate in the late of the country of Shakespeare while, in Sir Herceles trate muce attended comenty of conscriptors while, in our statement of the first one original effort, even the braggart and the fool. Depois, 1004, a more original effect, even use oraginal and uniformerical stock figures of councily suffer degradation. The best comody of Lary is The Old Troop (before 1666), in which he tells, cancel or two in the time troop (named 1000); in a minimum to the with trade and broad matter humour experiences of his own when and the royalist army in civil was times, and, incidentally mallems and abuses fallen puritanism. Even more popular in hie day was Edward Ravenscroft, the author of a dozen plays extendmay was survey in the survey of a current playe careful fire years. Raveneroth played ng over a career or meany aventy are years. As researchs passeged the provious drams at large and Molière in particular taking his the province drains at large and moners in particular taking the carllest comody and greatest success, Managements, or the Ottices catton comony and greatest success, at assessments, or the Ontires Tarned Gentleman, 1671, from Le Bourpous Gentlemans and Another de Posseconsona. In his palmy days, Ravenacoural dared to measure his wit with Drydon! But his one completions carca to measure me wit with Dirition. One are the examplections farce. It was this ancies in boisterous farce. It was this and its quanty was an success in considering succe. It was been and in secondalous satisfical nature that secured to his London Oscioloids. scandatous saurious mature tract societies to me acondon constorat, first acted in 1669, an aminal rovival on the stage on lord mayor's thre seem in 1000, an annual revival up too stage on seem mayors day for nearly a century. His other plays, among them an alteration of Trius Andronicus, call for no mention here!

is a same discovering, can not no monitor more that the first woman to as a answering a manner run comment, cons one unrest woman to write professionally for the English stage should have begun hewrite processorally for the conjunct stage should have begin ne-career at a moment when the morality of English drams was at career as a money, when any morality of language orange was at its lowest obb. Aphra or Aphra Bohn was born at Wys in 1640, to comes out. Agus or Apasta mean was own as 117s in 10su, the daughter of John Johnson, a barber. With a relative, whom toe uniquier or soun sourmon, a carror vivia a ressure, who had been nominated lieutenant governor and can do not be death, remained of cultiment, and went to reside there said, on the desaid, formation with his family marrying a Dutch merchant maned Bohn about and the history are returned to London and, apparently from in some wealth and position until 1666, in which year her husband died. Having made the acquaintance of the king

I See the original production to Monomorphic and Flor Corrient Leaves, and, Elevation the professor to Doycles Marriage & to Meanways, and an extrement of

I has The Feller at a g . See a first without within the first two densities by allow without printed within the first two densities are the Outer and the first densities are the Outer and the first densities and the first densities are the first density are the first densities are the first density are the first densities are the first den " For a last or measures or minor wrongs, process, was following the restoration, as the Michigaryty to this skepter.

in the time of her prosperity, she was sent to Antwerp as a spy but, finding her services unrecognised and unpeld, she turned. about 1670 to letters for a livelihood. Mrs Behn's novels in which she is a true forerunner of Defoe, do not concern us here nor her interesting anticipation of some of the ideas of Rousseau in the most famous of her stories, Oroscoko. Between 1671 and 1689, the year of her death, Mrs Behn wrote assiduously for the stare, turning out no less than fifteen dramas. Though she observed the nice laws of mine and thine with little more punctillousness than did her male contemporaries, it is not to be denied that Mrs Behn is inventive in situations if not in whole plots, ingenious in keeping her figures in almost incessant action and in maintaining an interminable flow of vivacious dialogue! Her most normlar play was The Rover, or The Banushed Cavaliers, which took the fancy of the town in 1677 and to which she wrote a second part in 1681. In both of these plays, the central figure is a swashbuckling sea captain ashore, the victim of every pretty face and the here of a string of questionable adventures. The scene of the first part, haples in carnival time, must have lent itself to brilliant and varied stage ectting. The Rover is taken entire from two unacted comedies of Thomas Lilligrow, entitled Thomaso the Wanderer which it may be suspected, contain not a little matter autobiographical. though, otherwise, as frankly borrowed from English playwrights of the rost as Mrs Behn herself borrowed from Killborews Mrs Behn's next comedy The Dutch Lover 1673, is a favour able specimen of the conventional comedy of cloak and sword, the scene, as in the second part of The Rover being Madrid. The Datch Lover is said to be founded on a Spanish romance written by the ingenious Don Francisco de las Coveras styled Don France Another class of Mrs Behn's comedies are those of her own contemporary town life, most of them lifted hodily from earlier English plays and made course in the process. For example. The Debauchee, 1677 is based on A Madd Couple well

¹ Seprel print it that Mrs Behn began with serious, recannile dramas such as Thereoff of an Aller Forced Marriage and her cone (I) traged J. Har Mer's Recognite wat west serve to consoly in Tab Error first need announcedly in Sabernous to the loss indice of the times. So alphas Behn collikité und Promoveria, in Aspita, rel. xxv pp. 98—101.
¹ Sep Bahr II. E., Biographic Prematice al. 1912 vol. 11, p. 252, where some of there between decorations of Killigrew are referred to their originals in Carew Firther and Jonson. Both of Killigrew's plays are said to have been written in Makril.

^{*} Langtaine 1091, p. 19; and see Harlitt, Collections and Voter 1907-76, p. 104.

matcht by Richard Brome The Town Fox, of the same data on William's Liserus of Inforst Hartage. The most character into comedy of this group is The City Herrer, 1693, in which Mrs Bohn has broadened even the humour of Middleton's A Mad are noun time in minutened even the minuter of amountains a attenrith auggestions from The Guardian of Massinger Nothing soul augreeous from the than the criticism that finds for could be more unioritimate than the criticism that man for Aphra Bohn a model in Jonson: That lady's art was predatory Apara Dean a modes in someon. That may are was promoted and ahe took any authors property as her own, painting with and and more any author's property as our own, passing more realistic, if conventional, brush the tops, the road, the make and reasons it conveniences, orms, two rope, the reason and makes of Etherego and Sedley in their eternal embroliment of questionable amorous intrigue. In The Rosadkeads, 1632, on questionaire amorous marigue. In 166 aussiliarius, 1000, Mrs. Behn ourreped Tatham's plot of The Risap entire to her comedy and thickened the whole with the addition of one of her concert and unexpect the whole with the addition or one of her harourite situations. In one of her latest plays, The Widow narounce amenators. In one of ner ances panys, and "below after her death, Mrs Bohn treated a historical arent of recent occurrence in the colony of streams a masterious promis or recent consurrence in one conour or Virginia—the rebellion, as it was called, of Nathaniel Bacoo yingona-too recount, as is was cauci, or reassance cancel and produced a result with all its absurdition of no small originality. Mrs Bohn was a very gifted woman, compelled to write for bread in an ago in which literature, and especially write for execut in an ago in minon increasing and collection balifically to the lowest and most depressed of control category naturations. Her success depended on her ability to write nument minimations. Ther success dependent on ner acoust to write a man. On the score of morality she is again and again more nace a man. On two score or more any of her male competitors in the art caring and respect to an any or nor many compositors in ser are of playmaking, and she is as frivolom and as abandoned in or pusymenting, and une is as invotons and as ananomorou in speech as the worst of them all. But, as has been well said, it spocen as the worse or term and then, as has been were said, as remaine difficult for us to believe that a woman whose literary remains unneut for as to bestere that a volume whose areas, talents commended her to the friendship and association of Dryden could have been degraded in her personal life

William Wycherley was born in 1640 of a substantial Europthire family He was educated, at first, in France, where h frequented good society but, with the coming back of the king trogermon grout source, out, which the country outer or too sing entered at Queen's college, Oxford, which, however he left with out a degree! Later at the Inner Temple, Wytherley led the out a terror . Later as the timer Armpac, hypmortey led the gray and frivolous life of a man about fown and made those gay and arrows me or a man access town and manners of his time that one is not to some of the sound is fixed, as. P. 104, fixed three of Mrs Beha's extension expension; within a surface of the Freed man. These are 7th CFF Britain, in which a particular distance of richtenidal The Rusy and The Fixed Count. All these results are also below as the fixed of the Rusy and the Fixed Count. Minded shows in inflation, The Rosey and The False Count. All these plays are the first the time of the Parish False Count. All these plays are the first than the first plays and Daylous affection and boutlief), Ward, val. 72, p. 451 note.

The same room processes in Covernor 1891.

Reval main section by Do embersion Dunbase of Montanine (Palm de Ran-

he, later, reproduced successfully in his plays. When a very old man, Wycheriey told Pope that he had written his first comedy. Love in a Wood, when he was but nineteen, that is in 1669-60. This seems an error, as all the evidence points to the first performance of this play in 1671 and to its inspiration in the earlier work of Etherege and Sedley Indeed, the dramatic activity of Wychericy was comprised within a period of less than five years, as The Plans Dealer, the fourth and last of his comedice, was on the stare not later than the suring of 1674. It was the success of Lope us a Wood, added to a handsome person, that brought Wycherley to the notice and favour of the king's mistress, the duchess of Clereland. To her he dedicated his comedy on its publication, and, by her he was drawn into the account to Wrcherley from this intimacy. And, some years later meeting lady Droghedo, a young widow of fortune, Wycherley married her losing thereby the favour of the king and a post of tutor to one of the royal children. His wife proved imperious. jeelous and ill-tempered and, when she died, years later, left the unfortunate poet vory little besides an exponsive lawsuit. It was not until James had come to the throne that the author of The Plans Dealer was remembered, his debts paid and a penalon of 2200 a year settled upon him. Wycherley outlived all the comranions of his wouth and middle age, dying in December 1715. His strange literary friendship with Pope, who was nearly fifty years his junior, and his later halting and abortive verses, may be passed by hero. It is not to be denied that Wycherley was much extermed by his friends, among whom, it must be remembered. were Dryden, Pope and Dennia. The old rous was credited with fairness of spirit and an outspoken contempt of deceit, qualities of his own plain dealer as well as with a tenderness of temper and a tendency to do justice to others for which we should not be altorother disposed to look in his own Manly Lore in a Wood or St James's Park, Wycherley's carliest

Lore in a Wood or St James's Park, Wycherley's carliest renture in comedy was suggested in subject, as in title, by the recent success of Sedies's Multerry Garden, which it parallels in its scenes in the park, as The Multerry Garden parallels Etherages earlier The Comical Revenge. To draw up sertom indictiments of pingiarism in cases such as these is a cheer waste of ingenuity. The novelty of a locality admirably fitted for the masquing and intrigue that delighted the age was a sufficient the manufully and intrigue size soughted the age was a subsection for all three comedies. The construction of Love to inspiration for an enree communication in some and a Wood is somewhat better than that of Etherege's plays, it is, a proof is somewhat certer team mas or canacago a page, to a bowerer not nearly so well written as any one of them, although the dialogue is direct, witty and idlomatic and, doubtless, closer the distogue is direct, which and minimatic son, distinction, second to the colloquial speech of the day than Etherege's brillian to use confidure special or the day man beautiges remain repartices. The characters, while presenting nothing beyond the reparaces. The currenters, white presenting nothing corons one of the town, the coroomh, the matter the matchmaker the affected widow are well defined and drawn with manumater are ancesed whose are non nomen and unwa was alreaded as vigorous and, at times, as coarse as are their actions and strong as regarding and, as strong, as course as are soon actions and their language. The Gentleman Dancing master was first staged towards the close of the year 1071, and we are surprised to hear covarus two cuse on too year 10/1, and we are surprised to near that 'it was not much liked, and was acted only six times! This roally diverting comedy presents a marked improvement in the reary surveying construct prosecute a measure uninvicance in the way of simplicity and unity on Wycherley's Provious effort. The way or sumputery and unity on tryonomers a particus sucre and Frenchified gull, the Englishman turned Spaniard, and the device remenined guit the employed by a clover maided to further her or a nomin summer companion by a cover mention to introor nor filtration with his rival—all are time honoured properties of the mrance with the first and are time monoured proposed to the modern too, on which the whole plot time, that of a lorer forced, under four of discovery to protend himself a dancing master is borrowed from Calderon a comedy Et Massiro de Danzar which, in turn, goos back to Lope de Vega. But there remains much that is inventive and original in the English concedy remains much that is inventive and original in the ringular contedy and the dialogue has developed in wit, and especially in a certain and the dialogue has developed in why and especially in a contain the Country West was, doubtless, on the stage before the end 22se Consery " We was, unsured on the stage ventre the coarses plays in the Reglish of the Jear 1072. It is one or the contract pulps in the continuing anguage, nor can it be said that this quality is referable to either haguage, nor can it on some unation quanty is retorated to currer of the comedica of Molbre, L Ecole des Fernance and L Reole des of the comedice or aimsec, Locove and Frances and Locove and Marie, which furnished hints to the English playwright. And starts, which are an unit to the bagine playwright. And yo, deeple the idea on which the whole action turns, The yet, despite the most on which the whose action turns, i.es.

¹ Sea, however the treatment of this topic by Elects, J., William Sychorley Lefen, and dramaticals Works, Massier 1983.

Country Wife is not only skillfully planned and exceedingly well Country I've m nos only samuny pannen and exceedingly well-written, but it is not devoid of the gravity of true entire. Indeed, written, out is in not corona at the gravity of select small income, it is in this play the dramatis personne of which include not a it as in this pay the artismus personse of which include her a single truly virtuous personage, that we perceive Wycherley to single truly virtuous personage, trait we perceive represent to have passed beyond the carmina are or nevertible, which receive picturing the age in its wantonness and folly and to have entered the more sembre regions of satire, in which and to mare emission use more sommer regions or search in sense, those things are referred for contrast and reproduction (erem if aces times are reservous for contrast and reproduction (even in memoracionaly) to the normal atandards of men of decent life.

But not until we reach The Plain Dealer, Wycherley's last and hest comedy, do we recognise that this savage blaschemer in the halls of beauty and of art is, after all, at heart a moralist, indignantly flagellating vice as well as gloating over her deformities. The Plans Dealer was first acted, with acclamation and success, in 1674, and printed three years later While certain scenes of it were successed by Molière's famous Le Maanthrope. Wycherley's masterpiece cannot but be regarded as an admirably bold, effective and original piece of dramatic satire. Here, the antirist is no less plainspoken than in The Country Wife, but, in the faithful Fidelia (perilous reincarnation of the Viola of a cleaner age), in the clearsighted running commentary of Eliza and in the integrity of Freeman, the author has set before us his own rough but honest standard of life and conduct, by means of which we may judge the justice and effect of his satirle strokes. Manly, the plain dealer, is a brute but it is the wickedness and hypocrisy of the are that has made him such. An infatuation for straightforward conduct and plain dealing has made him blind to the real qualities of men and women and, while he sees through superficial pretence and affectation, he is like a child in the hands of those who humour his whims. The Plain Dealer seems unpleasantly true to life. But for the normal restoration taint it might have approached tragedy in the completeness of Fidelias masionate devotion and in the gravity of Manly's du-Musicoment. As it is, The Plain Dealer is a notable work. compactly written, carefully planned and effectively executed. and, in its honest purpose to eastigate vice, not unworthy of the ideals of Ben Jonson himself. The man who thus mercilesely exposed the vice, social chicanery and hypocrisy of his are, who thus hughed to scorn its follies and petty subterfuges, was no mere wanton. In the tonic of Wycherley's Plan Dealer Luglish comedy recovered momentarily a sense of the actual relations of contemporary social conditions to better standards. But it was easier to follow Etherene than Wycherloy The frivalous always shun the ferule of the moralist, and, better, the artificial comedy continued its primrose path, until called to account by the trumpeted warnings of Jeremy Collier and the honest endeavours of Steele to redeem the fallen stage, which had now like a broken but unrenentant profligate, been brought to a reckoning with the past.

CHAPTER VI

THE RESTORATION DRAMA

n

COMORNUM, VARHEUGH, FARQUHAR, BTG.

WILLIAM CONGRESS, a spoilt child of life and literature, was Dorn in 1670 at Barday near Leeds. He came of an andent family long settled in Staffordshire and it was due to the soddent of his father's commanding the garrison at Yongbal that he sat or nn inthers commanding the garrison as 100gpan time to say upon the same bench with Swift at Kilkenny school and finished open ure same occass wan own as macony scale and macon his stadies at Trinity college, Doblim. In 1691, he was admitted to the Middle Temple, deserted law for literature, like many another composed a story called Incognita, or Love and Daty Reconciled, composed a sury cause recovering or some one way recovering in which Aurelian, the son of a Florentine nobleman, plays an in which and of which Dr Johnson rightly said that he would acasers part, and or which Let somewhite lightly said that he would rather praise than read it, and then, in 1630, came upon the town

It was Congreres signal good fortime to appear at the right it was congreve a signal good fortune to appear at the right moment. The theatre then enjoyed a larger Hennes and a lottler noment. Inc uncare uses europeu a sarger mentre ann a souser repute than erer before. The town asked no other favour of its repute than over before. The town season to other server of the combe writers than to be amused, and the interpreters of comedy rose to the fall height of their opportunity tues to the nun neight or men opportunity. At stage, and Olbber with perfect truth, at any one period, could show thirteen sectors standing all in educi light of excellence in their brokes actors, standing at in equal mans or carestones, in mon prince-alon and it was these actors who came loyally to Congress aid. and any it was upon action with country to compare the licemparable Betterton, the acclaimed master of them all, and the enchanting Mrs Bracepirdle portrayed the two chief and the encounting are presentative portrayer the two cares characters. The poets colleagues endorsed the approval of the Dryden, then in the plenitude of his power generously put. Dryoen, town in the premiune or an power generously balled the rising star. He declared that he had never seen such anicot use camp and are the young author the practical benefit of a mue pay and gave one young amount one passesses commune on his advice. Congrere, after his wont, set no great value upon his Then I wrote it, said he, in his reply to Collier

I had little thoughts of the stage, but did it, to amuse myself, in a slow recovery from a fit of sickness. If it amused its author it amused, also, its spectators. Its success was triumphant, and the fortunate Congreve became famous in a day

In his preface to the published play, Congress pleaded in extenuation an ignorance of the town and stage. No plea was necessary and if his ignorance of the town were confessed, the stare had left him no lessons to learn. With him, indeed, the craft of the stage was instinctive. From the very first he translated whatever he saw and heard in terms of the theatra. The comedy which beguiled a slow recovery displays all the technical adroliness of an old hand. The dialogue is polluhed to an even surface the play of wit flashes like sunlight upon water of the writing no more need be said than that it is Congresses own. For the rest, The Old Backelor wears upon it every sign of youth and hexperience. Neither of the two stories which are interlaced. none too closely in its plot is fresh or original. Though none of Congreres contemporaries could have written the play, any one of them might have devised its fable. In other words Congrese is playing supremely well the tune of the time. Heartfree and Silvia are but counters of artificial comedy. The marriage of the lady in the mask, which unties the knot of the play is no better than an accepted convention of the stage. Bluffe, Sharper and Wittol, who conduct the underplot, are stock characters of a still older fashion. They might have stepped out from Ben Jonson's comedy of humours. When Bluffe says Sir I honour von. I understand you love fighting, I reverence a man that loves fighting, sir, I kiss your bilts, you recognise the authentic accent of Boladill. Even Fondlewife, that kind of monerel scalet owes less to life than to Zeal-of-the-land Busy In the scene where Lucy, Silvia a mald, altercates with Setter the nimp, the language is marked by all the bombast of youth, which Congreve presently hild aside. Says Setter 'Thou art some forsaken Abigail wo have daliled with heretofire, and art come to tickle thy imagination with remembrance of iniquity past. And Lucy replies 'No. thou pitiful flatterer of thy master's imperfections! thou mankin, made up of the shreds and parings of his superfluous fopperies! This is the language neither of life nor of comedy, and it was doubtless acceptable to the audience by its mere expectedness.

But if we put saide the youthful extravagance of some passages and the too frequent reliance upon familiar types, we may discern in The Old Backelor the true germs of Congreres conserly. Not merely is the style already his own his purpose and sense of mercy or too easyte atroscy on own ma purpose and second character are orident on every page. Belinds, an affected buly who noter speaks well of Bellmour berself, nor suffers anybody che to rail at him, might be a first rough outline of Millament And Belimour sketches, in a single speech, the whole philosophy of the poet Come come, says he, leave brainess to littlers and windom to fools they have need of on wit be my faculty and pleasure my occupation, and let father Time shake his gizes. Honodorth, wit was Congreyes faculty pleasure his occupation and be succeeded so well that time still shakes his glass at him in vain.

In the same year (1693), The Double-Dealer was played at Drury lane, and Congrero a reputation, great already was rastly enhanced In character style and construction, The Double-Dealer is far above its predecessor. The one fault commonly imputed to it is active its protocomer. The one limit cummumy impaired to it is that it has too grave a motive for a country of manners. Ledy Touchwood is in love with Milleton, to whom Oynthis is promised Maskwell, Lady Touchwood's gallant, knows her socret, and attempts mass were, many avoicing works gained and an own composit of the Millefont's discomfittre and his own composit of to one is for assuments assessments and the own transpose or Cyuthia. Such is the simple story told with a simplicity of purpose in which Congreve himself took a proper pride.

The merical part of it, said he, in the dedication addressed to Charles Heatages, is regular. I designed the movel first, and is that several first and to that several first to the sever invested the fahis, and do not knew that I have betrowed one part at It says, where, I made the plot as strong as I could, because it is single, because I where, I make the Dior as strong as I count because it is must a occurrent.

well stock confusion, and was reached to preserve the three suities of the drame

That he succeeded in his design none will deay The Double-Anst no succession in us wearen more win yeary free trouver-Dealer is stornly classical in construction, and mores, from the the of the curtain in the first set to the fall of the curtain in the rate or the curtain in toe must act to the mit or the curtain in the fifth, to a settled end and with a settled purpose. The machinery first, to a section cost and with a souther purpose, the state described of the play is still conventional. A wrong letter given to str or top peay is said conveniences. A wrong setter given to nor Paul by lady Plyant, the villain surprised from behind a screen Paul by lany Flyant, the vinain surprised from bounds a survey these are the keys which unlock the plot. We might forgot their simple artifice, were it not for the considers villainy of teer suppose artifice, were it not for the conscious vinancy of Markwell. That surpasses protence and bellef. Markwell, indeed, standard that our passes processed and treated massaway, motors, is the familiar villain of melodrama. He is the accessor in a direct in of Bilfi and Joseph Surface, a sectate, a thinking villain, as tine of turnt and vesseps curried, a source, a numeric vines, a lady Touchwood calls him, whose black blood runs temperately had. The violence of his scenes with this lady exceeds the proper tout. And vinceing on the strength and the strength and the discovery by lord Touchwood texter into the company and the strength and the stren

"Astonishment," he exclaims, 'binds up my rage! Willainy upon villainy!
Heavens what a long track of dark decell has this discorred! I am conferended when I look back, and want a clue to guide me through the various masse of unbeard-of treathery. My wife! descussion! my hall!"

But there is no anticlimax. Congreve, with characteristic restmint, permits Maskwell after his unmasking to say no word.

Indeed, were it not for Maskwell a inveterate habit of solfloquy, he might trick us almost as easily as he tricks Millefont.

Why let me see, he murmars, 'I have the same force, the same words and accents, when I speak what I do think, and when I speak what I do not think —the vary same—and dear distimulation is the only art not to be known from nature.

And, again, I will deceive em all and yet secure myself twas a lucky thought! Well, this double-dealing is a jewel. Here Congrere resolutely parts company with nature, and relies upon an artifice of the stage, an artifice which he defends with considerable ingeoutly. A man in a sollloquy be argues, is only thinking, and thinking such matter as were inexcusable folly in him to speak. In other words, because we are concealed spectators of the plot in agitation, and the post field it increase; to let us know the whole impetery of the contrinsace, be is willing to feitor us of this person's tiemphits and to that end is forced to make use of the expedient of speech, no other better way yet being invented for the communications of thought.

That is a good a defence of sollloquy as may be made, and, employed by Congrove, sollloquy had this advantage it gave the author an opportunity which he was quick to seize, of Sophoclean irony. None of the personages of the drama, except lady Touchwood, knows what is evident to the audience, that Maskwell is a villain. When Millefont says, 'Maskwell, welcome! thy presence is a view of land appearing to my ship-wrecked hopes, the sense of irony is complete, and Congreve plays upon this note with the highest skill.

But it is not for its fable or for its Sophoclean irony that

But it is not for its fable or for its Sophoclean irrory that The Double-Deader is chlefly admirable. Rather we wonder today as the town wondered then, at its well drawn characters and its scenes of brilliant comedy. Lord and hady Froth, who might have been inspired by the duke and duchen of Newcastle, are master pieces of witty invention. The scene is never dull when her ladyship, a true precision, counters the gallantry and bei are of Mr Brisk, the most highly finished of coxembs, with her coquettish pedantry. And is not Sir Paul Plyant, a kind of Fondlewife in a higher sphere, an excellent creature? And is not the vaulty of his lady touched with a light and vivid hand? When she accepts Millefowth addresses to Oynthia as an assault upon her own horour, bidding him not to hope, and not to despair neither, the true splitt of comedy breather upon us. That the play was libreceived, mull it won the approval of the queen, is surprising. Dryden, the complotent dispenser of reputations, had no doubt of its merit. He wrote such a set of commendatory verses as might have put a seed upon the highest fame. He pictured himself as worn with cores and age, unprofitably kept at Heaven's expense, and living a rent-charge on his providence. He inspirent Gregere to be kind to his remains, to defend his departed Gread, and to shade those laurels, which descend to him. Meanwhile, be lavished the most generous praises upon him whom he looked upon as his inertiable encourse.

In easy disloyate is Fletcher's person.

He moved the mind, but had not prove the raise.

Overal Janes and by stronger of objectives; yellower,

Yet doubling Fletcher's firet, he wants his saidly.

In different claimfa both elected that age;

Ose for the study futble the stage.

Det both Congress; leady shall subset the stage.

Ose matched in Jacquent, both stype second in with

This is your periou, this your sattre store; Heaven, that but once wars predigal before,

To flinkerpers gars and much; she sould not give him more,

This of course, is the , apperbole of friendship. Congrere was superso in his own , colin it was not for him to match his proves an less great for monarchs.

If fally n adjured Congresse to maintain slace the performance of Romeo and Juliet. But she affords a relief to the brilliant flash of Concreve a wit, and, as for the sailor if he he not 'accounted very natural, he is 'very pleasant, as Dr Johnson observed long ago. For the rest, it may be said that at last Congreve has entered into his kingdom. In every scene, he shows himself a perfect master of his craft. The exposition of the plot is perfect. Jeremy although he speaks with Congress s voice, is the best servant in the whole range of comedy. You will search in vain for a truer picture of a curmudgeon than Sir Sampson Lexend, compact of humour and ill nature, whose blunt vivacity, as Cibber calls it, was marrellously portrayed by Underhill. Foresight, that 'peevish and positive' old fellow with an abourd pretence to understand palmistry astrology physiognomy, dreams and omens, was familiar to all frequenters of the theatre in those days of occult and half understood smerstitions. When the two meet to discuss the marriage of Ben and Angelica, they vaunt their excellence in alternate strains.

But I tell you' beggs Forestiph, I have travelled, sod travelled in the calertial spheros, know the signs and the planeta, and their houses—know whether life shall be long or short, knopy or anhappy whether diseases are carable or incurable. If journeys shall be presperous, undertakings successful; or goods staken recovered, I know—?

Sir Sampson s riposts is magnificent

I know thus he interrupts, the length of the Emperor of China's foot; leven thesed the great Mogal's dipper, and rids a heating upon an elephant with the Cham of Tartary—Body o' me, I have made a curkind of a king, and the present Hajesty of Bantam is the lenge of these loins, a valiant boast, the repartee to which,— theu modern Manderille! Ferdinand Mender Pinto was but a type of thee, thou liar of the first magnitude! ——seems singularly ineffective.

But it was upon Valentine, the lover of Angelica, that Congreve lavished all the resources of his art. There is a nobility of phrase and thought in Valentines encounters with his father Sir Sampson, which may be called Shakespearean in no mere spirit of adulation. In these passages, Congreve rises to a height of eloquent argument, which gives a tragic force to his work.

Why druth, sale Sir Sampson, mayn'l I do what I please? are yes not sy slave? did I not beget you? and might not I have chosen whether I would have begot you ar nest? 'Oens, who are you? Hence come you?' Cone, nonese, strip, and go naked out of the world, as you came brich 't.' Hy clothes are soon part off, veples Valentine; but you must also divest me of resons, thought, peadeas, inofinations, affections, appetites, senses, and the large train of attendants that you begot along with non.

higher sphere, an excellent creature? And is not the vanity of nigner spaces, an executes creature; and a not to remay on his lady touched with a light and vivid hand? When she accepts Millefourt addresses to Cynthia as an assault upon ber own honour bidding him not to hope, and not to despair neither nonour troung and more to hope, and not to occapion the true spirit of comedy breathes upon us. That the play was the stee spars or comedy measures also as these are last asset the surprising Dryden, the compotent dispenser of reputations, and no doubt of is meris. He wrote such a set of commendatory verses as might have put a seal upon the highest fame. He pictured himself as warm with cares and ago, unireofitably kept at Heaven's expense, and living a rent-charge on his providence. He implered Octgrere to be kind to his remains, to defend his departed friend, and to shade those laurels, which descend to him. Meanwhile, he layahed the most generous peniess upon him whom he looked upon as his inevitable successor In easy dialogue is Fletcher's praise;

in many consistence in electrone's present the moved the mind, but had not power to raise. He moved the mine, was seen too perver to raise. Great Joseon did by strongth of judgment piones; Great Jones did by strengts or jusquess. Yearn's feet doubling Fletcher's ferce, he wants his source falents bolk adorred their are; Yet doubling falents both adorned their age; One for the study tother for the stage. But both to Omngrove justly shall subsett Due octs to Congress Jacob Manie Steems. One matched in judgment, both o'spenished in wit.

This is your portion, this your sattre store; Heaven, that but suce was product in before, Herren, the out one one or product and the first the sould not give the more.

This, of course, is the hyperbole of friendship. Congress was This, of course, as two appearance or anonoming. Congress was supreme in his own realm it was not for him to match his prowess against greater monarchs. With all good faith Dryden adjured Congrers to maintain

With an good states, anythin adjusted congress to maintain his post 'that's all the fame you need. In Lore for Lore, his next comedy Congrero did far more than maintain his poet. his next country congress out in more tran mannain ms pos-the travelled one stage further towards the final triumph of The Ho trastuces one sugo incluse towards are mad arimops of the World. In 1695, Betterton and the best of his Pay of the fronta, in 1000, posteriors and the force of Druy correspond to the king's licence to act in a and, and being outpowered by the angle movies to separate theatre for themselves, opened the famous home in separate means to memorates opened in tames where the success of the play Amount and news with Lore for Lore. The success of the past without precedent and well merited. At each step, (Coggrere as a return, proceeding and went mention. At each supply congress, approached nearer to life as to the summit of his art. It is true stratucing transfer of the second of Lore for Lore is intrinsiced with a farce, in which Proc and Young Ben play their parts. It is true, also, that the hoydens nurse had been a convention upon the stage ever since the performance of Romeo and Julies. But she affords a relief to the brilliant flash of Congreve s wit, and, as for the sailor, if he be not 'accounted very natural, he is 'very pleasant, as Dr Johnson observed long ago. For the rest, it may be said that at last Congreve has entered into his kingdom. In every scene, he shows himself a perfect master of his craft. The exposition of the plot is perfect. Jeremy although he speaks with Congrero s voice, is the best servant in the whole range of comedy. You will search in vain for a truer picture of a curmudzeon than Sir Sampson Levend, compact of humour and III nature, whose 'blunt viracity, as Cibber calls it, was marrellously portrayed by Underhill.

Foresight, that 'peoriah and positive old fellow with an absurd pretence to understand palmletry astrology, physiognomy, dreams and omers, was famillar to all frequenters of the theatre in those days of occult and half understood superstitions. When the two meet to discuss the marriage of Ben and Angelica, they vaunt their excellence in alternate strains.

Bet I tell you, being Foresight I have travelled, and travelled in the calcular spheres, how the signs and the planets, and their bosses. I now whather IIIs shall be long or short, happy so unhappy whether diseases are outside or lecurable. If journeys shall be prosperous, undertakings successful or goods riokes recovered, I know—

Sir Sampson a reposts is magnificent

I know thus he interrupts, 'the length of the Emperor of Chine's foot; have there the great Maguife stipper and rid a kmiting upon an elephant with the Cham of Tartary.—Bedy o' ma, I have made a cuckoid of a king and the prown: Majanty of Bantam is the issue of there index.'

a valiant boast, the reportee to which,—' thou modern Mandeville! Ferdinand Mendes Pinto was but a type of thee, thou liar of the first magnitude! — seems singularly ineffective.

But it was upon Valentine, the lover of Angelica, that Congreve lavished all the resources of his art. There is a nobility of phrase and thought in Valentine's encounters with his father Sir Sampson, which may be called Shakespearean in no mere spirit of adulation. In these pesseges, Congreve rises to a height of eloquent argument, which gives a tragic force to his work.

Why, sirval, sain Sir Siampson, 'meyn't I do what I picase? are you not my share? did I not beget you't sail might not I have chosen whether I would have beget you or net? 'Ocus, who are year? whose come you? Come, access, sirty, and he sained out of the world, as you cause into X' 'My shallon are some you'd, replies Velerines; but you must also dress me of various, throught possess, inclinations, affections, supporting, serious, and the way to that A standards that you beget though with may.'

Still better as diction or invention, are the speeches of the mad Valentine, who speaks with the very voice of Hamlet.

Alas, peer man! his eyes are abrent, and his hands strivelied; his led Ass, peer man; his eyes are sarrant, and his hands shrivelled; his less deviatiled, and its back bowed, peay pear for a metamorphosis. (Rose of the contract o any manyo, and house the age; get time accurate aims and so desert some facts with belouging callons heads, a chine of steel, and Alles absulfars.

But all is not on this high plane. Ben and Prue, Tattle and Scandal curry us away to the lower slopes of farce, and when Mrs Frail meets her sister Mrs Foresight, it is a contest always of galety No scene in Congreros plays is touched with a lighter hand than that in which Mrs Foresight asia Mrs Frail where sho lost her gold bodkin O Sister Sister! And Mrs Frail demands in answer if you go to that where did you find this

After the triumph of Love for Love at the theatre in Islacola s inn fields, Congrere agreed to give the managers a new play every your if his health permitted, in exchange for a full abare. In 1897 he produced, not another comedy but The Moveming Brids, a rash experiment in the later Elizabethan drama. To a modern car The Mourning Bride is said fintian. The action, such as it is, is enerapped in impenetrable gloom. Prisons and burial vaults are its sombre background. The artifice-diagulse-upon which its plot turns is borrowed from comedy with the simple difference that the wrong man is not married but marriered. In other words, Manuel, king of Granada, personates Alphonso for jealousy of Zara

There with his bombast, and his robe arrayed, And laid along as he now lies supplies. I shall convict her to her face of fahebood.

Were it not that Manuel is decapitated by his favourite, we might be assisting at captain Bluffes marriage with the masked Lary But the taste of the time halled it as a masterpiece. It was heard with cuthustarm, and held the stage for many yours. Stranger still is it that Dr Johnson pronounced the description of the temple in the second act the finest poetical passage he had over read It is kile to discuss the vagarios of criticism, though few will be found now to mirtake the pompons platfinds of Congrere for poetry For the rest, the play opens with one of the oftment poetry For two rost, two pusy opens with one or the ordinar-quoted lines in English... Music bath charms to soothe a savage becast lis third act concludes on a famous fag the sense of

Heaven has no rage, like love to haired turned, Nor hell a fury like a woman scorned;

and its production was but an interlude in the career of Congrera.

Three years later, in 1700, Congrers a masterplece, The Way of the World was played at the theatre in Lincoln's fun fields. That it was a fallure on the stage is not remarkable. It was written to please its author's fastidious taste not to chime with the humour of the age. It was, in brief, a new invention in English literature. It is deformed neither by realism nor by farca. The comic splithereathes freely through its ample spaces. That it succeeded on the stage, says Congrere, was almost beyond my expectation. There is no hint of grossness in the characters. They are not of the common sort, "rather objects of charity than contempt, which the common sort, 'rather outcus or cusariy assu contempt, which were then popular on the stage. In brief, it was Congress purpose to design some characters, which should appear ridiculous, not so smooth through a natural fully (which is incorriginal, and therefore not procee to the

to design some characters, which should appear ridirectors, not so smooth through a natural fully (which is incorriging, and therefore not proper to stage) as through an affected wit, a wit, which at the same time that it is affected is also false.

And so, he set upon the boards a set of men and women of quick brains and cynical humours, who talked with the brilliance and rapidity wherewith the finished swordsman fences. They are not at the pains to do much. What Congrere calls the fable is of small account. It is difficult to put faith in the document which unravels the tangle and counteracts the villainy of Fainali. The trick nlaved upon lady Wishfort, that most desperate of all creatures a lady fighting an unequal battle with time, does no more than interrupt the raillery, which, with a vivid characterization, is the play's excuse. The cabal nights, on which they come togother and sit like a coroner's inquest on the murdered reputations of the week, and of which Sheridan's imitation fell far below the original, demonstrate at once what manner of men and women are the persons of the drame. Witword, indeed, is the very triumo of coxcombry with Petulant for his engaging foil. He neve opens his lips without an epigram, and in his extravagant chatte climbs to the topmost height of folly Fainall, says he 'how your lady 1 beg pardon the first price in the last a man of pleasure and the town, a question at once so foreign and domestic. And again A wit should be no more shourer than a woman constant on argues a decay of parts, as tother of beauty. How light, an cynical, and wellbred it all is, in spite of its purposed affectation

And the other characters, Mrs Marwood and the Fainalls, though the desper seriousness of intrigue impires them, are drawn with a perfect surety of skill and knowledge.

But Mrs Millamant and Mirabell overtop them all. The warfare of their wits and bearts is the very essence of the drams. George Meredith has said with justice that the play night be called 'The Conquest of a Town Coquetto and, when the spekanting Millamant and her lover are on the stage, our interest in the others fades to nothingness. By a happy stroke, Millamant does not appear until the second some of the second act, but Mirabell has discoursed of her qualifies, and you are all expectancy. And nolly does the love-sick Mirabell hall her approach. Here she comes, Thith, full sail, with her fan spread and her streamers out, and a shoal of fools for tenders, he, no, I cry her mercy! It is impossible to think of anything save the apparition of Dallia, in Scassos Acoustics.

That an bedsekt, occusts, and gay, Comes this way salling Like a stately fitty Of Thuran, bound for th'Esles Of Javan or Gadler With all her leavery on and taskle trim, Salls fifth, and streament wariars.

And Mrs Millement reveals becauff at once as a woman of fashion. sated with life. Instantly she strikes the note of nonchalance in her famous comment upon letters. Nobody knows how to write letters and yet one has om, one does not know why They serve one to nin up ones hair. Then, she and Mirabell fall bravely to the encounter 'Nay 'tis true, says he, you are no longer hand some when you've lost your lover your beauty dies upon the instant for beauty is the lover s gift. 'Lord, what is a lover, that It can give, asks Millamant. 'Why, one makes lovers as fast as one pleases, and they live as long as one pleases, and they die as soon as one pleases, and then, if one pleases, one makes more. Whenever Millament is upon the stage, Congrere is at his best. The speeches which he puts in her mouth are all delicately turned and finely olded. She is a nersonage by and of horself. She comes before you visibly and audibly. She is no profile, pointed upon paper and fitted with tars. Her erector has made her in three dimensions and, as she always differs from those about her so she is always consistent with horself. Mirabell knows her when he says that her true vanity is in her power of pleasing. She is indeed a kind of Beatrice, who strives with a willing Benedick. But, though also loves her Mimbell, yet will also not submit. When he, lacking humour as a lover would in the circumstances, complains that 'a man may as soon make a field by his wit, or a fortune by his honesty as win a woman by plain-dealing and sincerity how delly also turns his gravity aside? Sententious Mirabelli And it is to Mira Falnall, not to her rore that at last she acknowledges, 'well, if Mirabell should not make a good humband, I am a lost thing—for I find I love him relocative.

But, before the end, there is many a battle to be fought. In her contest with Mrs Marwood, the spurned beauty she hides her passion belind a veil of malicious merriment. I detest him hate him, madam, declares Mrs Marwood. O madam, why so do I, answers the defiant Millamant, 'and yet the creature loves me, hal hal hal how can one forbear laughing to think of it. Nor will she dwindle into marriage without an exaction at every step. She'll be solicited to the very last, nav and afterwards. It is not for her to endure the sancy looks of an assured man. And so she makes terms with Mirabell, and he, in turn, offers conditions of matrimony in a scene which for phrase and diction Congreve himself has never surpassed. Even at the last, she will yield only with an impertinence. Why does not the man take me? would you have me give myself to you over and over again! And Mirabell replies, 'Ay and over and over again. Thus, they share the victory, and, as you lay down the play in which inceme has been offered to the muse of comedy, you feel that The Way of the World, for all its malice, all its irony all its merriment, is as austere as tragedy, as rarefled as thought itself.

Congreve, then, carried to its highest perfection what is known as the artificial comedy or comedy of manners. He regarded himself as the legitimate heir of Terence and Menander and claimed with perfect jurtice to paint the world in which he lived. Something, of course, he owed to his predecessors, and to the noble traditions of the English stage. Blakespeare, as has been hinted, was ever an example to him, and at the beginning of his carreer he worked under the domination of Ben Jouson. Of those nearer to his own time, he was most deeply indebted to the lighthearted Etherage. But, being himself a true master of comedy he took for his material the life about him, a life which will reflected the gatety of king Charles's court. The thirty years which had peased since the restoration when Congrere began to write, had not availed to darken 'the gals day of wit and pleasure. A possege, in which he describes the composition of The Way of the World, reveals in a fissh his aim and ambition.

If it has happened, be written in a deflection addressed to Raigh seri Raigne, in any part of this councily that I have gained a term of style or expression more correct, or a least some correlling, takes in those that I have furnasely written, I must with equal prids and gratitude ascribe it to the bessers of your Lordship's admitting pas into your convention, and that of a society where sweeplood else was an well worthy of you, in your redirement but accesses from the town.

When doe allowance is made for the terms of a dedication, in which accuracy is asked of no man, it is easy to believe that, in lord Montague's country house, he found that wit and sparkle of life which he transferred to his scene, 'as upon a canvas of Wattesn — a Wattesn, whose galery and clerance are tempered by malice.

But the life which he painted was not the life of common day It was a life of pleasure and gallantry which had a code and speech of its own. No man ever selected from the vast world of experience what served his purpose more rigorously than Congreys. He never cared for seeing things that forced him to entertain low thoughts of his nature. I don't know how it is with others, said he, but I confess freely to you, I could never look long upon a monkey without mortifying reflections. Nor was be one who saw life whole. His sympathy was for persons of quality, and he lived in a world situate on the confines of cynicism and merriment. Had he ever descended to realism his comedies might have been open to reproach. But the scene, in which his Piyants and Froths, his Mirabells and Millefonts, his Millaments and Angelloss, his Brisks and Tattles, play their parts, is, like their names, fantastic enough half to justify the famous paradux of Charles Lamb. Even while we admit that Congreve painted what he chose to see, we may yet acknowledge that the persons of his drama, have got out of Christendom into the land of what shall I call it !-- of encholdry -the Utopia of miliantry whose pleasure is duty and the manners perfect freedom i

It is in the interpretation of this gallantry that Congreve diphysed his true genius. He was, above and before all, a man of letters. It was not enough for him, as for most of his contemporaries, to devise an ingenious situation or to excite the lampiter of the pit by the voice of boisterous fun. He had a natural lore and respect for the English tongue. He cared supermely for the making of his sentences. His nice scholarship had taught him the burden of association which time had laid upon this word or that. He used the language of his own day like a master because he was anchored securely to a knowledge of the past. In point and conclaion, his style is still unmatched in the literature of England. There is never in his writing a word too much, or an epithet that is superfinent. He distalan the stale artifices wherewith the journeyman ties his poor sentences together As a stern castigator of prose, he goes far beyond the example of his master, Mollère. And this sternly chastened prose, with its haunting memories of Shakespeare and Jonson, its flashing irony, and its quick allusireness, is a clear mirror of Congrevas mind. The poet's phrase is penetrated and informed by the wit and raillery of the poet's thought.

5 See Lamb's sony On the driftered County of the Lose Cratery.

In nothing does Congreve prove his art more abundantly than in the rhythm and cadence of his speech. His language appeals always to the ear rather than to the eye. So fine a master of comic diction was be, that, in every line he wrote, you may mark the rise and fall of the actor's voice. His words, in brief were written to be snoken he sternly excludes whatever is harsh or tasteless and we in our studies may still charm our cars with the exquisite polse of his lines, because the accent still falls where he meant that it should fall the stage effect may still be recovered in the printed page. He arranges his vowels with the same care which a musician gives to the arrangement of his notes. He avoids the clashing of uncongenial consonants, as a maker of harmonies refrains from discord. Open Love for Love or The Way of the World, where you will, and you will find passages which, by the precision wherewith they fit the volce, would give you pleasure were they deprived of meaning.

Congrere was thirty when he gave The Way of the World to the theatre. He wrote no more for the stage. The history of tetres shown no other instance of defection so great as this Several reasons for his sudden abandonment of letters have beer suggested—the cold reception of The Way of the World, or the blundering attack of Jereny Collier. The reasons are insufficient. The natural ariatocracy of Congrero's mind makes light of such rebuffs as these. A better reason is not far to seek. In depicting society Congresse had fallen in love with it. He turned willingly from art to life, for which his character and his sindles allke fitted him. He was by temperament what himself would have called a man of quality He might have ast for the portrait of Valentine or Mirabell He lavished in talk his incomparable gifts as an intellectual gradiator choosing only a quieter field for their dismemorate granuscor concerns our a queries now one our our play. The generosity of his friends placed him above and beyond pay ano guardensy to me attends pasced min above and belower the friding of want or debt. Soon after the production of Low for Love he was appointed commissioner for the licensing for hackney coaches, an office which he held until 1707 Commissioner of wine Homeon from 1705 to 1714 secretary for Jamaica from 1714 curards, he enjoyed also a place in the Paper same or the 1/12 ourserus no cupoyou are a preco at our aportion, and fixed in comfortable affinence upon £1900 a year Taking but a modest interest in politics, he kept aloof from the saring out a mouras mucross in pointing in aspe ascent from one of the emoliments. When—in 1711—be feared to be deprired of his commissionership of wine licences, Swift waited open my Lord Treasurer successfully pleaded the cause of Congrere, and was able to reasure his friend. So I have made a worthy man easy he writes, and that is a good day's work. Few of his content ne writes, and more or more closely attached friends. Halffar poraries near more or more exceeny amorness thromas mannas accepted his dedication and guarded his interests. Of Dryden s generous sympathy towards him something has already been said It was to him that Steele dedicated his Muccellance, and that to was to mm trust occurs unmerated ma suscentrates, and man Pope addressed the funous epilogue of his Itaad, which does equal none to minimize and to complete a intimates, nor did his wealth of Occur were some or completeners, nor that has remain to the was not every the was not every man a friend became he was no man a enemy The social graces man a strong receased no was no man a enemy and warm graces when a recent plan. His talk must have been an easy echo of his were agains in mine. And have many more used an easy econe or me concedies. Swift, the sternest of judges, direct with him and concurs. Own, are seeness of Jooges, union with time and Extromit on one occasion, and laughed till six. Though long rescourt on one occasion, and magned ou are monogn song before his death he was acclaimed the greatest man of letters in his time, though he lived in an atmosphere of grandeur his kindly services were always at the disposition of others. On another visit to gave me a Tailer says Swift, as blind as he is, for little Harrison. The courage and galety of his heart were undiminished by goot or by that flercost accourse of a scholar the loss of his eyeight. As the passage of the years separated him loss on an openion as an passage or the year separation and further from the trimphs of the stage, the writer was let in the intract from the triumpus or the stage, the state same one or man of the world. He is so far from being posted up with vanity wrote Giles Jacob, 'that he abounds with humility and good nature. He does not show so much the poet as the gentleman. It was this worldly front, which he showed to Voltaire in 1720, and which shocked the French philosopher, avid of literary fame. Congreve, in conversation, dismissed his masterpieces as trifles, and received Voltaire on the foot of a gentleman, who lived very plainly Voltaire replied that, had Congreve had the misfortune to be a mere gentleman, he would not have visited him. Both men spoke justly But Voltaire did not sufficiently appreciate the natural reticence of the Englishman, who, without the slightest vanity was still unwilling to discuss the masterpieces, which lay a quarter of a century behind him.

¹ W comes ration in the work the stars he had in Squire Training Herr for the solar of completeness is his assected of the nations given in a latter to Joseph Eastly on 30 May 1764; The translation you speek of is not altegether subset pairs in Vashraph and Within had a year in 3t. Each Edit as not of a French term. Allow, and I believe their, was done in two sourchasts; no there some her great matter in it. I was a completenest nodes to the people of quality at their subscription musics, without any design has been in seadle or priced for taken.

Thus, he lived a discreet, well ordered life, visiting the country bones of his friends, goasiping at Will's, seeking such solace as Bath or Tunbridge Wells might afford him. Of him Bracegirdle, the enchantress, whose genius embellished his plays, he remained unto the end the friend and neighbour. To the duchees of Mariborough, the wife of Francis Godolphin, he was bound in the bonds of a close attachment. When he died in 1729 he left £200 to the actrees, and to the duchees £10,000, a sum which might, as Johnson says, have given great satisfance to the ancient family from which he was descended. For this disposal of his wealth Congreve has been rated by Macanlay in his best Orbilian manner. At this distance of time sad with our imperfect knowledge of his motives, it seems rash to condemn the poet, whose generosity was rewarded after her own guise by the duchess of Mariborough. Davies tells us that she had an automaton, or small statue of trony, made exactly to resemble kim, which every day was brought to table. A gless was put in the hand of this status, which was supposed to bow to her Grace, and to nod in approbation of what she spoke to it.

This is the mere fripperry of fame. Posterity content, like Voltaire, to forget the gentleman, remembers the poet, who used the English tongue with perfect mastery and who, alone of his race and time, was fit to tread a measure in wit and raillery with Molière himself.

It would be difficult to find a more obvious contrast to Congrere than Sir John Vanbrugh. In the sense that Congrere was a man of letters Vanbrugh was not a man of letters at all. He was wholly unconscious of the diction, which for Congrere was a chief end of comedy. Cibber spoke the truth when he said that the best accross of Vanheugh's plays accend to be no more than bis common conversation committed to paper. In other words, Vanbrigh wrote as he talked, without reflection and with great good himour But, if the gift of artistic expression were denied him, he numour Duty is one gate of a state of a bluff temper and rigorous understanding, who easily communicated to his works the energy and humour of his mind. Like many another of foreign descent, he was more English than the English he engrossed in his own temperament the good and cril qualities of John Bull. Thus it was that he delighted in farce, not of situation but of character, as a season to constitute in meter, the other writers of comedy by a virid talent of caricature. He overcharged the eccentricity of his personages with so bold a hand as to anticipate the excesses of Gillray in another art. In brief, he was a highly competent gentleman, who found no enterprise too difficult for his courage and intelligence. He was a man of affairs, a soldier a herald, an mengrous, are was a man or ansatz, a source a necessary an architect and, no doubt, following the fashion, he sat himself down to write a comedy with the same easy carelessness whereath he andertook to build a palace. Few men known to history were more of a piece than he. In his life, as in his works, he was a more or a precentage no. in the site, as in the worse, the was a simple, sturdy natural Englishman, devoid allice of affectation and concealment. Pope ranked him among the three most honest conceanment. Fupe remove man among the uniter mean necessarily around the Kitcat clab, and his dignity around from Swift, not spit for apology a public regret that he had once satirised a man of wit and humour

His grandfather a merchant of Ghent, had found an asylum in London from the persocutions of the duke of Airs, had followed readon true too leasecommen or me next or vite our tomater as crait with success, and mad sent two soon, the younger of whom, the younger of whom, of the dramatist. Nothing is known of the ones, was no sense; or one organizate. Froming as anown or fur. John's youth and training. In 1601, when he was facult seven years of age, he was capit up in the Boatille as a suspected spy years or ago, no was casps up in the marcine as a suspection spy meditated a comedy within its comfortable walls, and, as Voltaire meditation a cumous within its communities water, and, as yourself own with surprise, was noter guilty of a single ratifical stroke owns will amplied was more fully or a single sauriou stroke against the country in which he had been so injuriously treated. Six years later in 1607 he produced The Relopes or Virtus in Cur years mater in 100/ no produced are discover or / wise in Danger and instandly established his reputation. This broad and Danger and managing examinated the repairment arms around and lively farce, which at once caught the popular farour owed its area succe, wanted as were consume one proposed success of the implication to Clibber's Low's Last Thirt. The character of the Impression to convey a news areas may. The customer of our Novelty Fashion in that play made an instant appeal to Vanbrugh s fancy he raised the beau to the peorage, with the title of lord range as range up coast to the Peerage, with the title of sort roppington, and conversed values a popper may a symmetric time. It is easy to find fault with the fable of The Releigne. It is less a play than two plays spliced into one. Loveloss, 'resolved this once to launch into temptation, and Berinthia, willing to abet him, cannot engage our interest. The farce exists for the proper display of lord Foppington, Sir Tunbelly Clumsey and Miss Hoyden. Here, indeed, are three caricatures after Vanbrugh a own heart. What they do matters not. It is what they my that reveals their eccentricities. Lord Fornington is the true fop of the period, with all his qualities exaggerated. His title gives him unfelgued delight. Strike me dumb-my Lord-your lordship- Sure whilst I was a knight. I was a very nonseous fellow. Well tis ten thousand pawnd well given—stap my vitals. He has the idle elegance of his kind. When the tailor tells him that if his pocket had been an inch lower down, it would not have held his pocket-handkerchief. 'Rat my pocket-handkerchief! he exclaims, 'Have I not a page to carry it? So he finds his life a perpetual 'raund of delights, and believes himself accentable to all. When Amanda strikes him in her defence. 'God's enree madam, he cries. I am a peer of the realm! No better full could be found for him than Sir Tunbelly, the ancestor in a direct line of squire Western. That he bears a close resemblance to nature need not be admitted. That he is an excellent piece of fooling cannot be denied. He holds siere in his country house, asks at the approach of a stranger whether the blunderbuss is primed, and, when he and his servants at last armear on the acone, they come armed with 'guns, clubs, pitchforks, and sorthes. Miss Hoyden is first cousin to Prue, and shows you in a phrase her true character 'It's well I have a husband a comine. or f'cod. I'd marry the baker I would so. While these immortal three are on the stage, they excite our whole-hearted mirth. Their fate cannot touch us, for in ridicule they transcend the scale of human kind.

The Procek d WVs, produced in 1697 is, in all respects, a better play Sit John Brute is Vanbrugh's masterploce. Caricature though he be, there are many touches of nature about him. He is the beau inverted, the man of fashion crossed with the churl. And he is fully conscious of his dignity Who do you call a drunken fallow, you slut you? he sake his wife. I'm a man of quality the King has made me a knight. He would not give a fig for a roog that is not full of sin and impedence. His ory is 'Liberty and property and old England, Hussa! He stands out in high relief by the side of hady Brute and Bolinds, who speak with the accent of everyday, and who are far nearer to common life than are the fine isdies of Congreve. His acreants rival their masters in impudence and Rasor and Mademokselle are worthy all the praise which Haziliti' has bestowed upon them.

It has been Sir John Vambrugh's fate to prove an imphration to our English novellats. Sir John Brute has long been a commonplace of fiction, and made a last appearance as IF Pitt Crawley in Yanthy Fenr Still more vivid as a painting of life than The Prowold Wife is the fragment, A Journey to London, left unfauthed as Vanbrugh's death. There is very little that is dramatic in this masterly sketch. It is but a picture of manners, of the impact of the country upon the town. How well are the characters drawn!
Sir Francis Headplece, a softened Sir Tunbelly, John Moody, his servans, who 'stamps about the streets in his dirty boots, and sataevery men he meets, if he can tell him where he may have a good lodging for a parliament man young Squire Humphrey, the miliched onlo of the country side—are painted in colours fresh to the drama. They have taken their place, one and all, in English fiction, and it is easy to measure the debt which Fielding and Smollett oved to Vanbrugh's happy fragment.

Like many others of his contemporaries, Vanbrugh did a vast deal of Journeywork. He botched a comedy of Fletcher's he translated plays from Boursault, from Anbourt, from Molibra, and, through Le Saga, from the Spanish. None of his versions is memorable, awar fits Conylederson (1700), englished from Janourt's Les Bouryseises à la Mede, and completely transformed in the process. As mere sleight of hand, The Conylederson claims our admiration. Closely as it follows the criptual, it is racy of our sell. As you read it, you think, not of the French original, but of Middleton and Dakker. It is as though Vanbrugh had breathed an English soul into a French body. Though he added but three scenes, though he never strays far even in word, from the prose of d Ancourt, he has handled his material with so deft a hand that he has mode another man's play his own and his country's. Dick Amiet and Brass are of the true breed Mrs Amlet would not have diagraced the earlier age of comedy, and the quickness of the dialogue, the speed of the action carried the play for many a year down the current of success.

The last years of Vanbrugh's life were devoted to architecture, and to its consequent disputes. His first experiment in the art—Castle Howard—was finished under laspy ampices. The theatre, which be built in the Haymarket, the single failure of a fortunate life, involved him in disaster because he forgot that the chief end of a theatre is to transmit what was spoken on the stage to the audience, and because be did not foresee that the Hay market would prove inaccessible to the quality. Blenheim, inter repted though it was by the meanness and temper of the implacable duchess, was one of the triumphs of his career. Confused in construction, like The Relayse, it is as vividly effective as the most brilliant of the author's comedies. A finished artist in neither medium, he was lifted high above such difficulties as perplex smaller men, by his cournge and good temper. He suffered the faite of the great Perrault, with whom he may fittingly be compared, from the wite of his time. But detraction never checked the broyancy of his spirit, and he died, still untouched by the years, in 1720.

I See Earliti's lestores on The English Comic Writers.

Twenty-eight years before the death of Vanbrugh-in 1098-Jeremy Collier's had startled the town with his Short View of the Immorality and Profaneness of the English Stage, and as Congress and Vanbruph are armigned therein with especial bitterness, something must here be said of this unforgotten, acrid controversy The attack upon literature was not new Evelyn had already deplored the license of the stage. In his preface to Prince Arthur Sir Richard Blackmore had complained that the poets used 'all their wit in opposition to religion, and to the destruction of virtue and good manners in the world. The old question of art and morals had been debated with rare intelligence by Robert Wolseley in 1685, by way of preface to Valentinian, and Joseph Wright, in his Country Convergations (1694) had motested analyst the attacks made by the stage upon virtue and the clergy Jaremy Collier, then, addressed a public inured to his argument, which he pressed with a ferocity beyond the reach of his immediate predecessors. A clererman and non juror Collier was indicted for absolving Friend and Parkyns at Tyburn, and, refusing to give himself up, was outlawed. As a critic, if critic he may be called, Collier was a patient pupil of Thomas Rymer whose style, method and paraded erudition he most faithfully mimicked. He did but apply the good sense, wherewith Rymer demolished Shakespeare, to the comedies of his time. Indeed, it is not too much to say that had the Short Visco of Tragedy not been written. we never should have seen the Short View of the Immorality and Profoneness of the English Stage. When Rymer says Should the Poet have provided such a husband for an only daughter of any noble Peer in England, the Blacksmoor must have changed ³ As to Jeruny Collin's general antivity as a histories and emplet, see post, vol. ix.

his skin to look our house of Lords in the face, and roundly declares 'that there is not a monkey that understands nature better not a pig in Barbary that has not a truer taste of things than Othello, you see the cupboard from which Jeremy Collier filched his good things.

Relying upon Rymer Collier went boldly to the attack. The playwrights, he asserted, were immodest, profame, and encourages of immorality. He made an appeal to universal blatory that he might prore the beaer wickedness of Englishmen. As little a respecter of persons as flymer, he lets his endget fall indiscreminately upon the backs of great and small. Aristophumes his own plays, anys he, are sufficient to rain his authority. For he discovers himself a downright atheist. He shares his moster a contempt of Shakespeare, who, says he, 'ts too guilty to make an evidence but I think he gains not much by his misbelawiour, he has commonly Plantus fate, when there is most some. His comment on Ophella matches Rymer's demolition of Desdemons. Having extolled Enriptics for seeing to it that Plandras frant is not level. his recovered.

Had Shakerpeare search this point for his young virgin Ophella, the pier had been better contrivit. Since he was reserved to drown the lady files a litten, he should have set her avincating a Hills amount

There we have the key to his criticism. Again, he will not permit the smallest reference to the Hible in a comedy. When Sir Sampson in Leve for Love any, your Sampson were strong dogs from the beginning. Collier's comment is characteristic. Here you have the sacred history buricagu'd, and Sampson once more brought into the House of Degon to make aport for the Philistene. He is indignant that level Foppington should confess that 'Samday is a ville day though the statement is perfectly consonant with the part. That Valentine, in Love for Love, should marrour I am truth, fills the non-jure with fury. Now a poet, says he, that had not been smitten with hisspherny would never have farmished fromy with imprintion. The thought of The Relayes drives him to the verge of medices. 'I almost wunder says he, 'the smoke of it has not darkened the sam, and turned the six to places and to sleen.

The worst offence of all committed by the dramatists is, in his eyes, the abuse of the clergy They play upon the character and endeavour not only the men but the business. If he had his way, he would forbid the introduction of any priors, heathen or Christian, into literature. 'The author of Dow Schastien, says he, strikes at the bishops through the sides of the Multi, and borrows the name of the Turk to make the Christian ridiculous. Then, with a tedious circumstance, he discusses the priesthood in all climes and ages, approves Racine, who brings a high priest into Athalie, but does him justice in his station, and awards the true palm to Cornellie and Molière who set no priest upon the stage. This is certainly the right method, and best secures the outworks of plety And, after a priest, he best loves a man of quality Plantus wins his approval because his boldest 'sallies are generally made by slaves and pundars. He asks indignantly what quarter the stage gives to quality and finds it extremely free and familiar That Manly in Wycherleys play should call a duke a rascal he confeeces is very much plain dealing. What necessity is there, he demands, 'to kick the coronets about the stage, and to make a man a lord, only in order to make him a coxcomb? Plainly there is no necessity but the fact that Collier should put the question is the best measure of his irrelevance.

It was Collier's supreme error to confuse art with life. He had but one touchstone for the drama, and that was the habit of his kind. He hald it down for an axiom that nothing must be discussed upon the stage which was contrary to the experience of his own blameless fireside. He assumed that the poet was an advocate for all the sins which he depicted that, if he brought upon the stage a thief or an adulterer he proudly glorified theft and adultery Never once did he attempt to understand the artist's motive or point of view, to estimate the beauty and value of words, to make allowance for the changing manners of changed times. His mind was not subtle enough to perceive that, in Congreve's words, it is the business of the comic poet to paint the vices and follies of human kind. As he could see no difference between art and life, so he could not separate satire from the thing satirised. That lord Fopplugton is held up to ridicule did not hinder his condemnation. His famous comment upon Juvenal courlets him of absurdity 'He teaches those vices he would cor rect, and writes more like a pimp than a poet. Such nanssons stuff is almost enough to debauch the alphabet, and make the language scandalous. And he does not understand that, if Juvenal be not justified, then be himself is guilty of the crimes which he imputes to Congreve and Vanbrugh.

So the worthy non-juror laid about him, fathering vice upon blameless words, and clipping wiser better men than himself to fit his bed of Progrustes. And even if we allowed that there was no difference between deed and speech, that a writer who mentioned a crime had already committed it, that, in fact, every theatre should be supplied with a gallows, and a judge and jury sit permanently in the Green Room, it would still be easy to convict Collier of injustice, especially towards Congreya. Nothing can be sold in a critic s favour who detects professeness and immedesty in The Mouraina Bride, who condomns the mere use of the words marter and inspiration, who finds a depth of blamberry in the sentence my John was a hackney-conchinan. There can be no doubt however that Collier's paraphlet enjoyed all the success which scandal could bring it. For a while the town talked and thought of nothing else. The king issued a solemn proclamation against vice and profunctions. Congreve and D'Urfey were prosecuted by the Middlesex magistrates. Fines were imposed upon Betterton and Mrs Bracegirdie. Then sharmed at the publicity of the numbles, the noets began to write in their defence. More wisely guided they would have held their tongues. The encounter could not be closely engaged. Jeromy having said little to their purpose, should have been ignored. To demolish his principles might have been worth while. To oppose him in detail was morely to hour another violent qualanght.

As they used other weapons, and fought another battle than Collier, neither Congreve nor Vanbrugh emerged with credit from the encounter Congreve, and Cibber seemed too sunch herito be able to defend binned, and Vanbrugh felt Collier so little that his wit only laughed at his leabes. Vanbrugh, indeed, had put forth an admirable defence in anticipation, and with an evident reference to Rabelais.

As for your maints, he wrote in a preduce to The Releyme (your theorogicport) case, I work with clarest flows and way so contain! I despair of them; for they are friends to nobody: They love nothing her their alters and tissuesering; they have too much cast lo have any sharrity; they made offenseed to judy as sinnered de in whee; and are as quarredones in their religion, as other people are in their dricht; as I hepe probely will inside what they my!

That is in the right rain. But it was Farquhar who, in an ingenious little work, The Adventures of Covent Gerden, justly ascribed to him by Leigh Hunt, made the wissest comment of all, to the effect that the best way of answring Mr. Gelller was not to have replied at all; to there was so much fire in his book, had not his advenuates thrown in feel, it would have fed yous literit, and so gene out in a blass.

The others flung themselves into the controversy with what spirit they might. Dryden, worn with the battle of life and letters, looked wearily on the fray He owned that in many things Collier had taxed him justly, and added if he be my enemy let him triumph. But he did not plead guilty as is generally supposed, without extennating circumstances and without the stern con demostion of his adversary

It were not difficult to prove said he, that in many places he has preserted my meaning by his glosses; and interpreted my words into bloophony and heavily of which they are not guilty. Becides that he is much given to horseplay in his raillery; and comes to battel, like a dictator from the plough. I will not say the Eart of Good House has course him yelp but I san must has devoured some part of his good manners and civility

D'Urfey rushed into the field with a preface to The Campaigners, like the light horseman that he was, and with a wong of The New Reformation dismissed the non-inverter from his mind:

But let State Herolvers
And Treason Absolvers
Exense if I sing:
The Scoundred that chooses
To ery down the Musea,
Would ery down the King.

With far greater solemnity did Dennis, who himself was not attacked by Collier, defend the Usefulness of the Stage, to the Happiness of Mankind, to Government, and to Religion, Collier replied to Congreve with superfluous violence, to Vanbrugh and Dennis with what seemed to him no doubt, an amiable restraint. For years the warfare was carried on in namphlet and prologue. and echoes of it may be heard to-day. The high respect in which Collier has been held remains a muxie of criticism. Macanlay for instance, finds him 's singularly fair controversialist, and at the same time regards Bymer as the worst critic that ever lived, not perceiving that their method is one and the same, that, if Collier is in the right of it, so is Rymer No doubt, the hand of tradition h strong but to forget all that has been said in the non-jurors favour, and to return to his text, is to awaken rudely from a dream. There seems to the present writer nothing of worth in Colliers pamphlet, save the forcible handling of the vernacular, which he owed, as has been said, to Rymer Not even is his sincerity obvious. He strains his sarcasm as he strains his argument. object was to abolish not to reform the stage, and he should have begun, not ended, with his Dissuasive from the Playhouse (1703). And if the respect lavished upon him is surprising, still stranger is the conviction which prevails of his influence. Scott and Macanlay Leigh Hunt and Lecky speak with one voice. Yet a brief examination of the facts proves that Collier a success was a success of saundal and no more. The poets bowed their knee not an incl or seancist and no more.

The poets bowed their knee not an ined

They replied to him, they abused him. and they went their way Compress true answer was not his and they would their may conficered white amount was now in Amendments but The West of the World Vanbrugh showed in The Confederacy how lightly he had taken his scolding. Farquhar made the first flight in December 1688, and nobody can assert that has clipsed the wings of his fancy with Collices about Meanwhile, the old repertory remained unchanged in the theatres. The pages of Genest, a much sure guide than tradition or desire, make erident the complete failure of Collier's attack. Dryden, Shadwell, Appra Behn and D'Urfey Ravenscroft and Wycherley were still apara from and 10 trio) marcanerus and 11 triangle were sun trianglement. In the rent year of Collier's supposed triumph. The Mouraing Brids, the peculiar object of his attack, brought the greatest andience they have this winter Congress, the most stenues, ammente uney mare une annuar congress, une nous blitterly mailgrood of all acted the highest popularity Love for interry manguest to an season the ingreen prisoners. Don Outcole which Lors nourshed in the unsetteenth century Now Univole, which Collier thought be had left dead on the field was still played A quarter of a century after the fray and The Country Wife long a quatter of a century area the alterations, said to have been introduced ondition he have seen the successions, said to mave occus uniquinous into the plays, of a feather's weight. To change Valenthe's I am not us past, or a reasser a storm. To change valuations 1 am front truth into I am honest was to spoil a disc passage, not to recent the stage and Vanhengh's transformation of the drunken clery man, in whose robes Sir John Brute disguised himself into a mag, in whose roots our youn must unguises minion may a dranken women, was not made until 1725. The new plays were of no other fashion than the old. Cibbers Caroless Hashand (1704), Charles Shadwell's Fair Quaker of Deal (1710), Gay's Three Hours after Marriage (1717), the comediae of Mir Centilire and Fielding afford no eridence of a chartened spirit. Hir Richard and recause above to evolution of a consultation sparts our anxiotion. Blackmore, who had anticipated Collier did not conceal his disappointment.

The stage has become imprograble, he wrote in 1716, where know posts, imposed by numbers, power and interest, in defeace of all raise of decreey and the state of the supported by numbers, power and interest, in container or all rease of occurs and rights still provide new seasons and new (amphatitions to sections the people,

The reformation, in brief, was, as Tom Brown called it, a drownie the rentermation, in twice, was, as then below to seen any amount of reformation, and when it came in fact, it came not from the terrormation, and when it came in fact, it came not literate and admonitions of Jeremy Collier who was remembered only as a

I Oktaiton, in his Honey mountably minimals the second of Officer's dilect.

William the asians one the poets, he wrong, much reproduced it. There was a fitted on the second of the sec Nather the sensor are the ports, he wrote, much reported at There was a fittle absorption at first, but it was adjusted to take the port of the same o Are symm there as many man to write man term have assumed to the and particular prologonal, and optional, cat-o'-nine-tails of the stage, or as a proper jest for an epilogue, but from a change in the manners of the people.

George Farquhar appeared too late to feel the parsons whip. He began his career as Congreve was closing his, and he could look upon the flerce dispute with an eye of contemptuous impartiality That Collier would have spared him there is no reason to believe, for though in temperament as in art he differed from his contem poraries, he claimed the full licence of his time. A man in whom there was no disguise, he unpacked his heart upon paper Whatever he knew and saw, all the manifold experiments of his life, he put unrestrainedly into his comedies. Ireland, the recruiting officer, the disbanded soldier, love, the bottle, and the road-these he handled with the freedom and joyonmess of one who knew them well. In a word, he broke the bonds of tradition, and declared, when he was truly himself, that gallantry was merely one aim of mankind. Of Congreve it is impossible to deduce anything from his plays. Like all great artists, he is enwrapped in a clock of aristocratic impersonality Farquhar, living and breathing without the shackles of art, reveals himself to us in every scene of his plays. Humour and high spirits were always his. He was lighthearted whatever befel him, and, having a natural propensity to case, knowing, moreover that he had very little estate, but what lay under the circumference of his hat, he expected misfortune and faced it without a murmur

His love of case made him impatient of study, and this impatience is discernible in his works. He knew not how to polish his dialogue. If it advanced the action of his piece or gave an ad ditional touch to character he was content. Though he manifestly owed something to Thomas Heywood in his sense of the open air and his treatment of the countryside though, like the rest of his age, he had read Mollère, and could borrow a scene of Le Bourgeois Gentilhousus for his Love and a Bottle, it is not by his literary preferences that you judge him. Few comic poets who keep a place in the history of the stage were less truly men of letters than he. For the rules of his craft he cared not a fot. He used, without shame, all the threadbare expedients of the theatra. There is not one of his plays whose plot is not unravelled by disguise. Leanthe, Oriana, and Silvia all masquerade as men. Clincher and Tom Errand in The Constant Couple exchange their clothes. Even the blameless Angelics, in Sir Harry Wildow not content with being a ghost, must don the finery of Beau Banter

But we let him trick us as he will. We know that he looks upon the world with honest eyes, and some that therein which excepted the works who noness eyes and some some surrous sures consequents the others. And, as for the critics, says he, they may go have the spirms the unities, roundly declaring that the rules of English Ac spains are univers, roundry accurang that the rules of angusa connecty don't lie in the company of Aristotle or his followers, but

If you would understand his plays, you must perforce know it you would understand me pasts, you must person something of his life. Born at Londonderry in 1077 he went in sometiming or me me born at tannouncerry in 10// no wear, in 1094 to Trinity college, Dublin, composed a Pindarick ode at 14. and, though intended for the church found his way early to the and, through measures an are country areas are may county or no stage. To be an actor was his carllest ambilion, and he appeared stage. To see an actor was an equipment and see appearing at the Smock Alley Theatre in the part of Othello. The discount as too output. Alloy autocare to too part of Outputs, and uncountries of the caused him by stage-fright was growtly enhanced by an neuro causest mm ty acago-rights was greatly empareou by an accidental would which he inflicted on a follow player and he actionnal women which he ministred on a lenow purper and se gladly took the advice of Robert Wilks, who remained his lifeloog friend, and who played the chief part in all his plays save one, to thens, and who played one came part in all the playe save one, so write a comody. So it was that, in 1693, he came to London with write a company to it was tone, in towe, its came to toneium with Lorse and a Bottle in his pocket, and made an instant conquest tops are a notae in as poeker, and made an matter conquest of the theatre. The comedy which has little to commend it save or the total and movement, is, doubtless, autobiographical a visu scase or my and more men, as converses, according representational finest have set for Hoebuck, the young Irishman ranjunar mineri mess nave sas in moscocce, me young mamman freshly arrived in town, and it is easy to believe that the artifice reamy servou in what, and is in easy to become a superior was wherewith Lyrick, the dishereded poet, escaped his creditors, was part of Farquhar's own experience. The dramatist, in brief, part or randomers own experience. The manners in much strong young around traume grown and arthur or are never exhibited, displays more energy than skill. His comedy is crude cannates, unspays more energy uses as in the contesty is cruse and filled with credities, but a bluff shoority shines through it all, and the not surprising that an andlence, accommond to disguises and it is not surprising that an amount, accommon to magnifest at the traditional trappings of the stage, should have received it

A year later followed The Constant Courts, or a Trip to the A feet rater toutowed the communic company of a first of an imitation of Judice, which owed something of its post to an initiation of City Romonics, entitled The Adventures of Cornel ocarrous vity monones, enumed the Advanturer of Corners and Law been said by Leigh varuers, Justy sections to rangular as has been said by Leign Hunt. This comedy a clear advance in workmanably, was halled and a menterpiece with accimation. Though it is not free from as a memorphoto with actualments. Though is so the live artisce, it is far better constructed than Love and a Bottle, and actives, it is not occur consumerous town Love and a count, and its hero, Sir Harry Wildsir appeared a bean of a new broad to he nerty our marry illinear appeared a seem of a new serves as a generation sated with Foppingtons. He has become and courage, a generative said with coppingsion atoms noticely and course, he has lived abroad, and he does not bound his horizon, like Sir And Clincher Autresty Francisco, when the crossions of the same And contacts the false beau, the discreet Colonel Standard, and lady Luterrell herself, though not quite unknown to comedy, have something in them of the blood and bone of human kind. In 1701 Eir Harry Wildair appeared in another play of which he is the eponymous hero, and renowed his career of wit and cynickun. Truly the gentleman from France, as Farquhar called his Wildair enjoyed the freedom of the British stage and brought fame if not wealth to the author of his being.

Thereafter came two failures, and then, in 1705 a piece of good fortune sent Farquhar on military duty to Shrowsbury His recruits, as he tells us, were reviewed by his general and his colonel. and could not fail to pass muster. More than that, he brought back with him a comedy The Recreating Officer which he dedicated 'to all friends round the Wrekin, and which, for him, was the beginning of a new drams. Henceforth he has done with the town and its gallants for ever. The example of Congrere and Vanbrugh compels him no more. He takes for his material the episodes of a broader life, and helps to bridge the chasm which lies between the comedy of manners and the English novel, upon whose beginnings he had a profound influence. He has done what he could to make an end of discusse, though Silvia must perforce put on the breeches. The most of his characters are natural men and women, not above nor below the stature of mankind. His soldiers, as has been pointed out, are no longer milites glorion, pale reflections of Bobedill, but such as himself, whom he paints as Captain Plume, and his comrades. Costar Pearmain and Thomas Appletree are true men of the soil. Even Silvia is far remote from the fine ladies who for twenty years had railed and bantered on the stage. The common jeniousy of her sax, as Plume says, which is nothing but their avarice of pleasure, she despises. brief, Farquhar had at last found his way. He had put a new set of characters in a new scene. He had added something fresh to the material of comedy

A year later was played The Beaux' Stratagent in construction as character the masterplees of its author. Full of the gaiety and bustle of the road, it depicts the life of taverus and the highway. Here are travellers bordened with trunks and bandboxes. There is Boniface to fleece them, with his gog and his counting, and Gibbet to take what Boniface has left. The whole comedy moves in an atmosphere of boisterous merriment. Aimwell and Archer in an aumosphere or conserves merraceus. Anniven and areas are beaux drawn from the life, not taken from a councily generous, Ballant, and light-hearted. And Cherry and her estechism is genant, ann agus-reasted. And carery and mer carectana a there got himsonr there! Throughout the play Farquhar criticises the in a humaner feation than any dramatist since the author of The English Trureller He does not possess the artistry of or the Congress Armener the coes not beares the armery or of the sentimental comedy Congress no was permits a regimining or the sentimental content of that passion to be both marry and wise which has been the or cras passion to ue tout morely and who whom has been one of Will a coffee-home but of a man, and the result is that The Becar' Strategers is not indelibly marked with the date of its birth

³ In 1704 he had probased, with the aid of Prior Mottests, a farm in three acts called The Suep-Oncel. It was adapted from Les Corresses d'Oridens, by Jean de la Okapille, and his chief interest in that it seems a rough absolution The Benne' Streetspee.

His muse was happier than his life. An III provided pocket the name was applied than me the An in province parace could not keep pace with the joyourness of his heart. A lack of come not acep page with the joycomess of his harmless pleasures. A man or ponce interrupted the course of his harmless pleasures. He took defight always in freel scance and quick impressions the bictures because meetabout me course or me tactures presenter to the property of the ocugus aways in free scores and quest impressors we pursues of Holland, which he drew in his letters prove how well he or Monand, which he drew in his fectors, prove now well no understood the art of travelling and, held fast in the bonds of penny he was seldom able to escape from Corent Garden. If penury no was someon and to excape from covers transce. It was certain to fall on him. A noble materiane was across, it was occasin to that on min. A noise patron persuaded him to pay his debts by the sale of his comparter personned aim to pay an accus or the same or one cou-mission, promising him snother that other never came. In 1703 meanure, promoting turn account was outer corner came. In 1/03
he married a lady who pretended to be a fortune, and who, for love no manifed a may was protessed to be a fortune, and was, for fore of Farquhar had concealed her porerty. Here was a plot which or paritiment near connection and purersy liters was a pass which might have served him for a consedy and which, with him cast for magnic mayo serren min ner a country and whiten, when min case nor the chief ride, could have had only a tragle ending. Being Farquhar the harboured no recentment for the trick that had been put upon the matter two resembles are the tree was that there put upon him, but behaved to her with all the delicacy and tenderness of and hother could damn the brave scroulty of his spirit. If he clung to the galety of the bean, he never knew or true statte. It no manual to one Reseath or one nearest une matter whose one read a conscious in without fastery and he confesses himself so great an epicure that he bates all pleasure that's purched by Score all opecars teat in mater an pressure that a parenta a my rate, did not accept for Harry Wildair's

I rough here my passion, he writes in a passage of critical discounty if the following state of the property and the greatest proof of my common to the property of the proof too kup at room waters on my my reason; and the greatest proof of my addition that a lady mand expect is this; I would run may become proof of my book harmy but would not be a second on the sum of the same of t anerton teat a easy most expect is teas; a weath run any masses to mean to body happy but would not for any transfory pleasure make either of an

It was not within his compass to make them both happy His friend Wilks, missing him at the theatre, discovered him ledged in For Leading daid to Farthly county as conduct article by J. G. Robertson in The Hestern Language Review vol. 21 (1907).

7

a back garret in St Martin's Lone. He advised him to write a play which should be instantly put upon the stage. 'Write! says Farquhar 'll is impossible that a man one write common sense who is heartless, and has not a shilling in his pocket. Wilks gave him twenty guineau, and, in six weeks, The Beaux Stratagem, that martel of merriment and good homour was finished. It hints by no sign that the author wrote it with 'a settled sickness upon him, nor that before he finished the second act he perceived the approaches of death. It was produced on 8 March 1707 and Farquhar lived just long enough to hear of its triumphant success. A last note to the friend of his brief life, Wilks, was found among his papers.

Dear Bob, I have not anything to leave thee to perpetuate my memory but two helpless girls; look upon them sometimes, and think on him who was to the last memort of his life thins, G. Farquhar

An epilogue fittingly spoken by a gallant man whose life was in dire conflict with his theory of living, and whose courage, in suffer ing, smiained him to the end.

Whenever this or that bettle of literature is engaged, the leaders are attended by a vast mob of camp-followers, who without natural talent or obvious ingenuity, hope to share the spoils of victory. Thus it was that the masters of comedy saw their works mimicked and the repute of their craft not enhanced by eager industrious journeymen. The most of these preserve their names and no more in the annals of the stage. Now and again they emerge, for some quality of wit or good nature, from the rest and, with their half fergotten works, prompt the curiosity of the historian. Thomas Shadwell' poet laureate, for instance, enjoyed a popularity in his own day which is not easily explicable in ours. Literary skill was not among the gifts of his mind. He had a trick of invention, and was determined to turn the best models to account. But when he had invented (or adapted) his puppets, to knamed them so careflessly that they long since lost their interest for us. The sense of style the mastery of language, which might have tempered their extravagance, were hating to him, and be resembled the facile playwrights of to-day in reducing to look upon the drawns as a branch of literature. In his preface to The Swiless Lowers he proudly professed himself a pupil of Ben Jonson, whose wardety of 'lumours' he attenpted to reproduce, and whom, he thought, 'all dramatic poets ought to imitate. His debt to Ben arought, an orangene poess origin to imman. Ins occus to non-Joseon was infinitely less than his debt to Mollère. The Swiles somen was municely loss man an ueue to moure. The owners Lorers to based upon Les Fachesse Bury Fair his masterplece. overs in much upon the success only sure in manuscripton overs in faithful characters to Les Précesses Reduciées and ores ha hallando charactera to the symmetric and the Muer is no more than a pervention of LAPRICA. Yet so good 2.00 Miles in no more train a pervenion of 12 Apare. 1 ce so good a concept of himself had Shadwell, that he thought he did his a concess of managed and managed, that no unvalue we can amaged a no discredit. The not barrenness of wit or invention that nances in one-cruit. An intermediate we are or inventors makes me borrow from the French, he boarted, but lariners. To be lary is a greater sin, in the realm of art, then to be barren to us may us a Stoucer and in one round of any stand of the Controlled Shakespeare as amiably as he patronized Mollère. When he had mangled Theses of Athens, I can truly my he Truck, that I have made it a play Yet with all his shortcomings he held the stage for a quarter of a contary. His Epoca Wells was praised by Saint Erremond. He had the wit to make Don Juan has present of the Libertins, and with The Square of Alastic he the nervous the troornes, and what the owner of also are the scaled the topmost height of his popularity. This last play has scarce the supercon magne or me popularity arms has play man many faults. Its story is incredible. The cant used by the rufflers of Whitefriers is handled with so little tact, that it seems an excrescence upon the dialogue rather than a part of it. Yet how creecace upon the unalogue rather than a part of it. I to sive much excellent material it contains was revealed by Sir Walter more executions management is contained what to reason up our management, who made a free mass of it in The Fortunate of Nigor Briefly the vices and virtues of harry Shadwell have been we summed up by Rochester in four lines

I See above, Chapter L

Shadwell's unfinished Works do yet impart Onesi Proofs of force of Nature, none of Art, Orres of focus on some on statutes, more or are, With fast haid Stroken be dather here and there, Shearing great Mestary with little Care.

It is this judgment which, together with Drydens satire, has proserved the name and fame of Shadwell from oblition. Another camp-follower was Thomas D'Urfey a French He-guenot by descent and a habitant of Grab Street by profession, Suemot by outcome and a manufacture of the course of parameters who farmed his hand to prose or verse, composed scope, elegion, and panegyries, whole takes tragical and comical, contrived operaand journey, solves said, assess and common, unitarity uponess and pontonimes, satirfied ministers, cultivated the friendship and jamusoniness sourcess immerces, constructs see arresuming of kings, changed his politics as he changed his coat, and left. or among managers are positives as no casangers are cont, and sombestion behind him a vest number of boisterous farces and bombestio central time a vast number or nonnervous larces and commenced in the life and speech he was menousments A source serious items in our and special to need the familiar friend of all, was called Torn by high and low and too manip half a century played a part in the life of his time. for many man a century prayer a part in the me or ma trans.

Addison remembered King Charles the Second leaning on his Annual remembered Alan Charles are occurs seeining our assistant ones, and humming over a song with him

He was important enough to incur Buckinghams disfavour and lives undeservedly in the distich

And sing-song D'Urfey, placed beneath abuses, Lires by his impudence, and not the Muses.

His more actious plays, mere burleaques of tragedy are in 'Ercles vein'. The Stepe of Hemphus and The Famous History of the Ruse and Fall of Massaniello may scarcely be matched, for sheer funtism, in English literature. Thus it is that Genoviso, the Jesuit, apostrophises the friends of Massaniello

Short on, ye soes of clamour louder still. And fright the Grandres with obstreperous soles, Whilst I secure in Darling Policies Am pleased with the success of my Designs Against this rile ungrateful Oily Naples.

For two parts, of five acts each, D'Urfey sustains his rant at this high level, interrupting it, characteristically, with scorgs. The fourth act opens with a fishermans rousing chorus, and the serious bediness of the fifth act is pleasantly begulled by an encounter, in american strains, between two fish fags. Thus, the method and temperament of D'Urfey are sufficiently displayed, and a mere giance at Massaraello will explain why his friends vessly preferred his some to his tragedies.

The plays which he dignifies by the name of comedy are, one and all, the broadest of broad farces. There is no trick of the time which he does not employ. The thimmest disguless are sufficient to deceive his simple heroes. His country squires are gullty of wilder sutten than any devised by Vanbrugh. As he borrowed from his contemporaries, so his poor treasury of wit was rified by his successors. Madam Fickle, in the comedy of that name, gave Farquiar a hint for the lady Lurewell of The name, gave Farquiar a hint for the lady Lurewell of The name, gave Farquiar a hint for the lady Lurewell of The Monatons Comple, and the well-discovered misfortunes of Beau Clincher and Old Smuggler one something to the disaster which overtakes Beauford and Brainworm in The Vartuous Wyl. Many years later in 1709, D'Urfor astonished the town with a play of a wholly new pattern. It was called The Modern Prophote, and was described by Steele as a most unasswerable astire against the late spirit of enthumban. The writer had by long experience observed, wrote The Tatler 'that, in company very frave discourses had been followed by haveley; and therefore has tenned the beacent that way with great secess, and taken from his analone all manner of superalities, by the agitations of peatry Mrs Hignall, where he has with freed whileter made a lar-addres, as well as a prophetese.

Of the virtues which abould grace a comb poet D'Urfey had none. Or tim virtuces winted anoma grace a comm poes D United man mone. He showed not even a passing interest in human character be the moved not even a passing interest in minimal constances so knew no other wit than horseplay. In brief, save in the writing And no occer wit than not repeat in tirte, have in the writing of songs, he was a man of very alonder takent, and it is a high or sough, no was a man or very scenaer casen, and n is a ingu tribute to his amiable qualities that his memory has been so long and so clearly preserved.

a so ecourly preserved.

Colley Clibber was what D'Urfey was not, a born man of the Couldy Culture was wises if Oring was into a norm man or and theatre. An actor by temperament a comic poet by accident, the took a perfect measure of the public taste, and he know his collegues as he know the bit and porces. He could fit plussely no over a horizon measure or one human reserve and no area and the could fit plussely no over a horizon measure or one phasen reserve and no area. currougues as me anew and per and outres. He could be unneceded them with parts nicely solited to the talent of each. The and them with parts menty somet to the carear or each result is that his plays are no more than delicately poised machines, which run easily enough upon the stage, but creak horriby in the study Congress criticism of Cibber strat play Lore's Last Skyl, the jurtice of which Cibber in his candid Avers Law Court, the Jurice of which Utoper in his cannot way publicly acknowledged, would serve as a criticism for them punitry actnowinessed, would serve as a criticism for time. It has only in it, said Congrove, a great many things that and the same only in the same conserver, a stream many tunings man where like with that in reality were not wit. Even when he declared accents with true life he succeeded in making the portrait lifeless sons no crow true me, no succeeded in meaning sale por trait moves as atone. Lady Betty Modlah, in The Corollar Husband, is said to have owed not a little to Mrs Oldfield's manner of conversa

There are many sections in this character, the author contents, that I may almost any ware originally her even, or only drawft with a little more than the character of the contents of the contents of the character of the charac I may autom my news urquining one own, we only serve a wi-care, then when they negligently fall from her lively automore

Yet Lady Botty is essentially a pupper of the stage. As you listen for 140 those in communities the wife of Sir Charles Easy or Lord to nor with which is consumers use wis of our contrion pasy or Lord Fopplagaton, your mind never fills for a moment to the talk of human beings. You are reminded at every page, of that phrase-However Gibber being a man of the theatre, cared as little for human character as for literature. It was for him to fill the me number unsersected as the interaction as a second to the party of the period of the he are cover and no must recent the san Renocarous in enmanific or pursue no was an expert, and no carest new whose work to was teast on an approved Mrs Centilives. His most important services to support an assume that as a support to the support of the support a none as no universal area venturies, area mass universals source to the stage of his time was the invention of a new kind of bear to the stage of the time was the invention of a line aims of occurs in Sir Novelly Fashloo, who was accepted by Vanhrugh as a type, m our noticity reaction, who was account by reacting as a type, and held the stage until he was reincarnated as Lord Dandressy. Services such as this hardly outlast the author who does them, and te/re la rel. z.

I did by the relation of Claber's later plays to mexicone in occordy one the retrospect

Colley Cibber has a claim upon our regard, which all his lourney work would not merit. He left us in his Apology for his Life an incomparable record (published in 1740). It is to his talent of observation, to his enod humour and to his sense of justice that we ove the best set of theatrical portraits that ever came down to us. As much as words can tell, he has told us of Mrs Bracewirdle and Betterton, of Leigh and Nokes, of Estcourt and Powell, of all the brilliant actors, who in our golden age of comedy made the reproscatation of that comedy nomible. And he has done this with never a lealous word, with never a binted dislike at a prosperous rival. Above all, he has drawn an imperishable portrait of himself, a man protected against insult by a triple brass of confidence, whose vanity smiled untouched at the fierce assaults of desperate enemies. That presently he was chosen by Pone to succeed Theobald on the throne of folly gave him a strange pleasure, and he discovered I think the real reason of Pope's choice, 'Right or wrong, said he, a lick at the laurent will always be a sure balt, ad captandum vulgus, to entch him little readers. It was, in effect the laurente unworthy of his wreath that the great poet attacked, and the poet a shaft should have been directed against the court which put Cibber in a false position. His laureate odes, sunk in the waters of oblivion, no longer trouble us. We may even forget the skilful maker of stage-plays. The historian of the theatre, the apologist, who has left behind him the best commentary that we have upon the comedy of manners, will still be entitled to the world's gratitude.

though he wears the bays no longer on his brow

CHAPTER VII

THE RESTORATION DRAMA

m

TRACTO POETS

True lesser tragic writers of this period, uninapired as most of their work seems when indeed on its own merits, fall incritably to a still lower level by comparison with the amazing literary powers of their great leader Dryden. They have all his faults and only a small and occasional admixture of his strength and resource. In tracedy as in other departments of literature, the genius of Dryden overtops, on a general estimate, the productions of his lessor contemporaries, and how closely his lead in the drama was followed may be correctly estimated from the fact that, in 1678, on his abundoning the use of rimed verse in the drame, his followers also droomed this impossible form, wisely reflecting, so doubt, that when Dryden was not satisfied as to its success, they might be sure of its failure. The productions of the lesser tracedless however in which a desire to catch the humour of the public and to flatter the mood of the hour is the most freopently recurring characteristic, remain most valuable as beloing to furnish a clear idea of the state of the drams and the prevailing standard of taste.

The drama on the re-opening of the theatres was subjected to a food of new inferences. Paramount among these was the inference of the court, to which dramatists and actors allke bastered to pay the homage of service flattery. This lack of independence on the part of the distance of mersia consequent on the restoration, account, in a large measure, for the degradation into which tragedy in England sunk. While councily retained, in its brightest manifestations at all events, some redecuning wit and homour tragedy foll to a level of dulness and labricity never surpassed before or since. It should not be overlooked that, in this period, attendance at the theatre became a constant social habit, and the theatre itself a great.

social force and in this way alone can be explained the success on the stage of much portentous rubbish. People went to the theatre not because they were interested in the drama but because, to the exclusion of almost all other interests, they were interested in one another. This is strikingly brought out by Crowne in the epilogue to Sir Courtly Nice, where he says of the audience

> They came not to see plays, but act their ewn, And had throug'd andleness when we had note.

It must also be remembered that this was an age which bred a succession of great actors and actresses, who occupied an unprecedentedly large share of the public attention. As Colley Gibber said, speaking of Lees Alexander the Great

When these flowing Numbers came from the Month of a Betterion the Militade no more desired Sense to them than our musical Consecurers lightly to contribute the scalebate Airs of an Interest Opens,

The same must have been even more true of such a woman as Mrs Barry Lee, Crowne and a host of others were perfectly capable of writing plays, with a French polish, to suit these new conditions, but they are unreadable to-day. The crowd of lesser restoration dramatists perfectly understood what would be effective on the stage, and for the rest they relied on in eredible bombast and threadbare stage devices. It has been seen how notwithstanding all the changes which had taken place in the literary and social conditions of the times, and in those of the performance of plays, the theatres were reopened in 1660 with favourite old plays but now side by side with the surviving traditions, new influences were at work? Among these influences, the operatic element, which owed its first introduction to D'Avenant, became specially powerful in tragedy, and helped to bring about its degradation. Another important factor in the development of tragedy via the influence, direct and indirect. of French romance and drams, produced its first important result in the herolo play which has been discussed in treating of the works of its chief representative and unapproached master Dryden*

The heroic play was not, however an entirely new growth. For the most part, it was French, but the influence of the Eliza bethan dramatists may also be traced in it and though at first

An Apology for Mr Life, ed. Love. R. W., 1806, vol. 1, 100.
 Ot. and, thun, v. pp. 121 st., 197 sec., 122 me.

CZ. nate, chap, 3, pp. 20 sqc.

right, it may appear to represent a departure from previous agon, is may appear to represent a organizate from previous methods and ideals, and to be a distinct breaking away from the methods and mean, and to use a unsume terminal way ment ones blabed traditions of tragedy in England, yet a more careful estationary transfers or tragency in cagonin, yet a more carein examination shows that, in the main, it was the natural successor of examination arrows start, in size that it was two marries successful the late Elizabethan drams, modified according to provailing tastes, and confined within the pseudo-classical limits which were the and common which the productions it is not surprising that the heroto play did not take deep root in English and By 1680 are nervee pear and not ease usely two at magness and any re-tragedies in verse were going out of fashion, and the English tragic suggested in verse acre going out or manner, and one congrue usage manner as opposed to the French, began to re-assert itself in the work of contemporary dramatists.

The works of the great French dramatists had, also, a consider able direct influence on English tragedy during the restoration and unrease on angular tragely unring the resonance period and this is particularly true of Pierre Cornellia. A version of the Cid by Joseph Rutter had been acted before 1037 before or the Orie by suspent nation man been acrea, control provide their Majesties at Court and on the Cockpitt Stage in Drury Lane ment anyeares as your and on the vocalus onese on printy same This, the first translation of Cornellie into English, was follung the urest translation of cornelle mits implication and lowed in 1055 and 1856, by two very poor blank verse versions of corect, in two and two, or two very poor mana rouse receases of Polymeric and Hornes respectively executed by file William Lower To greater and florido respectively executed by our remain nower to have been acted. The masterpleces of Aroused paces seems to make the seems and masses paces in French drams were, therefore, not unfamiliar in translation, and, resuct trains were, mercury, not unsummer in transactint, and, shortly after the restoration, Cornelle found a worthy translator and the person of Mrs Katherine Phillips—the Matchiese Orinda. as the person of Acts Anatoring Pumps— we Assembles Ormon. Her resident of Possipie, in rimed verse, was produced in Dublin early ter version of Frances, in timest verse, was produced in Dutain early in 1663 with great edgt, and increased her already high reputation. in 1000 with great edge and increased ner sureasy nigh reputation in 1000 with great edge and increased ner sureasy night reputation. It was also successionly produced in Lemmon, and published their in the same year. In 1864, another version of Posspée by certain in me same year. An 1000, suppose receiving or somples by cortain Parsons of Honour —Waller and lord Euckhurst were the moving takens of troubert - 11 and and into management was one morning sparits—was soccosming produced and, or no scare year stero-cites was reproduced by Lodowick Carlell. This last met with great erns was reproduced by section and carried and section are section and section and section are section as a se success, through it town not amount one respectation force or trusted the same batch of translations. Mrs Philips, meanwhile, encouraged the same nation of translations. ALTS FIRMULA, meanwaite, encouraged by the success of Possiply began to translate Horace but she died of the success of a company began to transmit itorice but and more than the first four acts. Her remien, completed by Sir John Denham, was published in 1600 together computed by our soun seminary, was promined in roos sogened with her other works but, in later issues, a conclusion by Charles and ner other works took in more manue, a concussion by control Cotton was printed. Charles Cotton had himself printed a trans-Cotton was printed. Charine Cotton and massen printed a manner of the whole play in 1071. his version, however was never acted. In the same year 1871, John Dancers translation of Acton in the mine your 10/1, sum removes transaction to Nicowide was acted at the Theatre Royal in Dublin. While Corpelle thus became known and appreciated in England, his contemporary Racine had to wait for anything like general acceptation until the next century, though signs are not wanting that he was being studied in England during the last quarter of the seventeenth century The industrious Crowne nut forth, in 1676, an utterly inadequate version of Andromaone, which did not meet with any favour, no hint being given of the extra ordinary coming success of Ambrose Philips's adaptation of the same place in 1712. Otway's Titus and Berentoe, though a careful and acholorly version, and abounding in the pathetic touch which was his secret, met with but moderate success on the stage. The same was the case with two other versions of plays by Racine-Achilles, or Iphygenia in Aulus by Abol Boyer (1700) and Phaedro and Heppolitus (1700) by Edmund Smith (who, a few years later, supplied Rows with material for his Lady Jane Grav), when the tracedy was first produced. Public taste. no doubt, was being educated, for in 1712. The Distrest Mother. Ambrose Philips's skilful adaptation of Andromaone, met with immediate and lasting popularity and Smith a Phaedra and Hippolitus was revived many times, with marked success, from 1793 onwards

French Influence on English Tragedy 181

On the whole, French influence on English tragedy, at this time, has been exaggerated, such as it was, it affected rather the outward form than the inward spirit. Much was written to prove that the French mode, which was a recreasion to classic rules, was the right mode, and most of the certier plays of the period bear marks of the influence of these discussions. But, for the last quarter of the century, the drums in the hands of Orway, Southerne and Howe was essentially a descendant of carifer English work. The result of the controversy is admirably summed up by Thorndito. The laws of the pseudo-classicists, he says, were held to be measureably good, but Shakespeare without those laws had been undeniably great?

After Dryden, the foremest place among the dramatists of the restoration age is, undoubtedly beld by Thomas Chway Born is 1639, at Trotton in Sussex, he was educated at Winchester and Christ Church, Oxford, but he left the university without taking a degree. After an unsuccessful appearance in Mrs Aphra Behn s Ford Marriago (1671), he devoted himself to writing for the stage. His first play Alcibiades, a tragedy in rimed verse, was acted in 1675 at the new theatre in Dorset garden by the duke of York's company including the Bettertons and Mrs Barry is a dreary and stilled piece, and, though the herole play was the as a tremy and stated paces and, along the metally has the height of its roome, Alcibiades met with but little success. It as the beight of the region, according these with our misses which has next play Don Carlos (1676), Otway was more happy. Though and stead past area versus (1970). Usiney that make mappy and still hampered by bombast and rimed verse, the scenes are handled with some vigour and the play seems to have been effective on the stage, and very popular. It ran for ten nights and was frequently revived. The plot is taken from the Abbé de Saint-Refir his torical romance of Don Carlos (1673), of which a translation Into English had appeared in 1074. The same source, at a later period, august man appeared in 10/2 and same source as a successful supplied Schiller with the plot of a tragedy bearing the same title as Otray's but though the English poet was not unknown in demany there is no oridence to show that Schiller made use of this work. The part of Phillip II was played by Betterton, who proquoed all Otash's superducat blaka-s temarkaple boot of their attractiveness from an actor's point of view

³ And this was probably due to his having tasked on to it Moliter's Feurieries de Scents.

Thombie, A. H., Tressty v. 141.

Two capable versions of French plays followed (1677)—Tries and the Change from Bacines and Phe Change of Scapin from Mollère a Fourterres de Scapia. The latter held the stage for more than a hundred years.

While Otway was away in Holland on military service, his first Value otway was away in mountain on numery service, one one-comody Friendship as Fashion, was produced (1678). His coning. comedy Priestassip as Castion, was produced (10/0). the gentle, however most assuredly did not lie in the direction of comedy. On his return to London, Otray produced (1690) The History and Fall the return to tondoon, Usway parameter (1000) are attentify uneas conby come survey man or summ regord as no named summe in the prologue, is taken bodlly from Rosseo and Julie. In the tre protegue, as taken tomay from those of the order of the same year (1690) appeared The Orphica, a trakedy in blank verse. and the earlier of the two plays upon which Otway's reputation and the entirer of the two plays upon which treats approved to have been suggested by Rober Tailor's comedy The Hoppe hath lost his Pearle (1614), which I resembles, or more probably by a work contiled Emples Ad reaching or more invising by a rota continue computes an earliers. By a Person of Honour (attributed to Roger Boyle, control by a Person of Honour (authorised to stoger polyc, and of Oriery), published in 1672, which narrates the exceptedes of charles Brandon, dake of Suffolk With this play Otway steppod out of the rank and file of restoration dramatists into his own our or the rank and the or resource that translates the me of particular place among great English tragedisms. He abandooed particular piaco amoug great rengiam tragemana. Lio acomatom the artificial emotions of heroto personages in favour of the joya toe arthurn curvature of herms personages in savour or and re-

i II is probable that this travely was produced before The Orphan for it severs in the Term Canada and the IEON for Madicalization form 1879, while The Orphan for its contract travely and the Orphan for its to very common of the Army 1940) for Alexandra occurs (Md. for Easter form 1880, all months later.

period, a singularly domestic play Two brothers, Castallo and Polydore, are in love with Modimia, their father's ward. Castallo secretly contracts himself to her in marriage but Polydore, over hearing their plans for meeting, and unaware of the mature of the which unites them, contrives to supplant his brother on the wedding night. Castalio, seeking admittance to the bridal chamber, is supposed to be Polydore and rudely repulsed, and he spends the night cursing all womankind. With the morrow come explanations, and the misery of the situation becomes clear Whether the plot makes too large demands on the reader's credulity or whether it shocks his sense of decorum, the pathetic irony of the situation in which the characters find themselves is indisputably brought home with great trage force.

A comedy called The Soudier's Fortune followed (1681), in which the poet drew upon his military experiences. Langhaine discovered in this piece numerous borrowings—notably from Boccaccio and Sourron but the episodes are so common to plays of intrigue that it is difficult to say whence Otway derived them. There is, however, more than a suggestion of Molières L'École des Marus.

Otway's next play Venice Preserved or a Plot Discover'd a tragedy in blank verse, was first acted in February 1682. The story of this tragedy is taken from an anecdotal history entitled La Conjuration des Espagnols contre la république de Veniss en 1618. mublished in 1874 by the Abbé de Seint-Réal. An English translation had appeared in 1875. The finest character in the play Belviders, is, however, purely the creation of the poet's genius and the scenes between her and Jaffler, the weak, but at heart noble, complicator who is personded by his wife to reveal the plot to the senate, are beyond praise. Jaffler torn between his passionate affection for Belviders and his almost equal devotion to his friends and their cause, presents a signally true picture of the human soul seeking vainly to recondle contending ideals. His remorse and shame under the stinging reproaches of his dear friend and fellow-complicator Plerre, his imability to free himself from the clinging love and fascination with which Belvidera has connected him, his agony of grief on the senate a breach of its promise to spere the lives of all the complicators as the reward of his treachery-all these successive phases through which his sensitive, but week and vaculating spirit has to mass are desicted with communate skill and true tracic power

This may have been seted earlier on Otway's return from Holland.

Otways political leaning reveals itself in the secondary with its obvious reference to the poplah plot, and still n cearly in the prologue and epilogue and the play is further. figured by some scandalous comic scenes, written to ridic Anthony carl of Shafteabury in the character of Antonio bacivious old senator

In Venue Preserved and to a less extent, in The Orphen Otway produced plays which, for intensity of feeling and for th display of demental emotions are worthy to rank with the cappay or orongonate carrying and with some of sater measuripaces or one consavoration are, and with some or Fletcher's plays in particular. The language of their float rescars pays in parisonar and anguage of the passages is of a notable simplicity admirably conveying the poets conception of his characters. Unfortunately passages of noble poetry are, at times intermixed with lines of or none pocky are as some measured with the and continuing pletures of women overwhelmed by grief, confusion and hopeless. produce or women over anomaco or gener command and nopocon-Monimia— the trembling tender kind deserted Monimia—and anomina see are using severe and use recovered anomina and the still finer Balviders a masterpiece of insight into the human the suit timer their times were originally performed by Mrs Barry the colobrated actross who appeared in Otway's first play Alerbadea, and for whom the poet had conceived a hopeless passion. Some and for whom the pare has consisted a superior prove how doply on mis concers to mis more from properties, and prove into success, he had fallen under her influence. His unrequited passion for to man range muons had a manifest share in the uplifting of this genins from the dusty commonplaces of losser restoration as genus num was our common or result to he heights of characterisation and expression which he reached in his two great tragedies. The Orphon and Tenice Preserved were extremely popular and were played with some frequency down to the middle of the and were pusped with many inducately down to the interest of the plays are full of opportunities for nineteenth century Doug pays are the of opportunities in them continued in them continued to the part of the continued to the to be among the greatest triamphs, not only when first produced, to to annual the Sciences triesmans, not vary such that produced of the Bettertons and Mrs Berry but, also, of their most disor the pottersions and sine party out, also, or their most on-the field of successors. Mrs Eddoms and Miss O'Nelli were famous Eclyiders and Monimos Pierre was one of John Kemble a most Detriniers and successes and Carrick many times played Pierre, James Unamoun.

The Alkasi, or The Second Part of The Soudder's Fortune Freier Preservic was revived at Saction. Traits, in 1845 with Phalps as Jating and France Preserved was revired at Section. Wells, in 1845 with Photos as elementary as a Bartillera, and, as recently as 1901, the play was essed in London by completes the list of Otway's plays. It was produced in 1684 and is as unsatisfactory as his previous efforts in comedy. In addition to the plays mentioned above, Otway wrote some poems and translations of no great importance. The most ambitious of the poems are The Poet's Completist of his Muse (1680), which is full of curious autobiographical touches and Window Castle, published posthumoresly in 1685, a panegyric on Charles II. He also wrote, according to the fashion of the day a few prologues and collegues for his fellow-dramatists. He died, in 1686, in the utmost want and misery—one account says of actual starvation.

Though Otway failed as an actor he possessed a strong sense of dramatic possibilities and it is the combination of this sense with an original and individual genius, that will preserve his two chief effects from oblivion

Nathaniel Lee, son of a clergyman, was born about 1853, and educated at Westminster and Trinity college, Cambridge, where he graduated R.A. in 1668. His early experiences bear a strong resemblance to those of Otway Like him. Lee began his life in Lordon in reliance upon some of the fitful patrons of letters in whom the age abounded, and, also like Otway he, in the same year at the same theatre, failed utterly as an actor. The first plays and there is not much to choose between them-of the two dramatists alike appeared in 1675. Between that date and 1681. Lee produced in rapid succession eight tragedles and a tragecomedy all with quasi-historical settings. His first play, Nero. Emperour of Rome (1875) was succeeded, in 1876, by Sophonisba. or Hannibal's Overthrow, which seems to have been inmired by Orrer's Parthemasa. To 1676, also, belongs Gloriana, or The Court of Augustus Cassar These three are heroic plays, for the most part in rimed verse, and thoroughly typical of the period. In 1677. Lee, following Dryden's lead, produced the blank years play entitled The Reval Queens, or The Death of Alexander the Great, which proved an immediate and lasting success. It is founded on Cassandre, a romance by La Calprenède, upon whose Cleopatrs Lee had already drawn for some of the incidents in his Gloriana. There followed, in 1678, Muhridates, Kung of Pontus.

¹ For Hashitts orbisions of these two plays are his Lestures on the Drussatio-Literature of the Age of Elizabeth, I. vin (Gelinteel Works, add. Winhe A. R. and Olowe, A., vol. v. pp. 844—6). In his first heater (R. p. 181) Hashitt declares that with the acception of a single writer, Owen, and of a single play of the (Frende Preservit) there is acclosely in trapely and drunnaite postry. In the acceptance of the age of Elizabetheer and Innealized a Computer of the Preserving Computer of the Age of Elizabetheer and Innealized at Drus.

may retain to the personalities of the performers, and to the fact that, on the occasion for which it was written, Dryden, the poor lamente, was passed over in favour of Crowne through the Interest

Crownes first comedy The Country Wet, was acted in 1676. It is founded on Molleros Le Stellers, on Famour Pensire (1867). and, in Sir Mannerly Shellow contains a sort of first exects of the type—that of the pompons gull—which Crowne afterwards dereloped with marked success into the Podesth (in City Politiques). incorporate management and success more one a consume (on very a consumeration of that mane), and Lord Stately (in

Then followed three tragedies of absolute dulness, The Destruction of Jerusalen (1677) The Ambitions Statemen (1876). of which the theme and sources are alike French and Tayestee taken from Seneca (1631). The concentrated horror of the lastmontioned piece has led to its receiving more notice from Crowne s mentioned piece and not we receiving more nouncement continued than his other tragic productions. but there is not any mobility in his treatment of the awful story Shortly before the appearance of the tragedy Crowne, in 1000, produced a hash of appearance or one washed over no, or room produces a man or Hakespeare's Heavy VI Part II which he called The Missy O' Over Il'ar and followed this in 1681 with Henry the Surth, the First Part. With the Murder of Humphrey Duke of

His best comedies came next City Politiques (1683), and Sir Courtly Aice, or It cannot be (1885). The date of the former of these pieces, long a subject of delates is now established. In or times proces, sould a sungless or notate as not constrained and tery annualing active on the whiter, despite. the customers and tray amounts matter on the walks, despite the originals crusing perinneuty laureauron or the contrary were drawn may be detected without difficulty. Thus Oatos masquorados as Dr Panchy and Stephen Calledge is introduced in the guise of a bricklayer with oregreen contenge as manufacture in the games of a concentration of the Poderth of the very m-Neapolitan Naples, where the action is supposed Lank County if worth while to touland some from this as well as from other plays by Growns in the Estimate from the Garrier purps 2) of vocame in the analysis from the fourteen purp.

Disprophic Democracy from the date of production on 1875; while several other contains backeting the date of production on 1875; while several other contains backeting the contains the a Hisporphia Dramatica gives the date of production on 1873; while several standarding deposit, state that if did not appear and 1866. The surface of the date of axisorites, Substiting Germet, state that III did not appear until 10m. The entropy of these dates in frees between produces, impossible; for Drydmen Hedge, The entropy light problems do by unuse, and the above to best and made to best values and some terroles; of these datase as, freez interests evidence, impromises the Depleary Media, prairies in 1822, in referred to by access and the pixy is feet of entire about pixel and expensive the freezing time for any interest and the pixel of every interest and every pixel and every STEERING LINE STATE CHANGE IN THE FURNISH. IN STREET PRODUCTS that the country was concluded with The Country STR, which actually appeared to 1875; in any case, the country was the country of the street formation of the street formation and the street formation of the street formation and the street formation of the suchand was The Country ST, which arisally appeared to 1875; in any case, too publishment of the True Consequence and Michael Symmetry for the True and case, too the November and Sand materials in 1882. It was no beauty to 1899.

Sir Courtly Nice is by far the best of Crownes plays, and has in it something of the true spirit of comedy which, in this age, reached its height in the group of comic dramatists headed by Congreso It is founded on Moreton play No puede ser meardar una surjer (No holding a Woman), which is itself an imitation of Lone de Veras Mayor Imposibile (The greatest of impossibilities). An English version of Moreto a comedy by Sir Thomas St Serie, had been produced without success in 1688 under the Hile Tarage & Wiles, or the Coffee-House but Crowne does not seem to have been aware of its existence. In any case, the principal characters in Crownes play are new Sir Courtly himself, with Hothead and Testimony-an admirably contrasted pair representing, in a most diverting manner, the extreme factions of the age-and Surly are all due to Cromnes Invention?

The tragedies of Dureus (1688), Regulus (1609) and Caligula (1698) call for no more than a possing mention. Crownes last two comedies are, however more interesting. The English Prier (1690) is a mordant satire on the personal lives and characters of the Catholic priests who had been high in favour at the court of James IL. Father Petre has been suggested as the original of Father Finical and the entire is certainly on much the same lines as that of several scandalous parratives of the Martin s life? The piece owes much to Mollère a Tartufe (printed 1669), well known in England by this time.

The story of The Currous Imperturent in Don Quixote, which had been used ten years proviously by Southerne in The Disappointment, or the Mother in Pastson, furnished Growne with a central idea for his last comedy The Married Beau (1694). "It is less witty and coarser than his other comedica. Crowne seems to have been alive in 1701

Lee has been called an inferior Otway and Crowne, so far as

Bon entr chap, vz.

OL ante, shap, 2 p 48

[&]quot; Hetherd is sharred with not often attending shareh. What then, I'm for the thereb. Thereby wasts to know whether we sen't be saved union we on to Order! für Courily though he has besteved some geraftens on playe, as a nong or a prolonge. holds to the principle that Men of quality are above wit. The play is full of allustrate to the politim of the day and an entirely new rack to Godfory' is introduced, in obvious allesion to the murker of Sir Edmand Berry Golfrey in 1878. Mountaint was anequalled in the part of fiir County Hise, which he performed at its original production at the Theatre Royal, though Oolley Othber made a great passess of the part in the eighteenth earliery when it was frequently revived.

Asserting to Dormer's Resche Anglisanne (faustralia reprint, 1886, p. 45) Growns produced a further comedy Justice Bury; but it provid not a living play and was Dever pristed.

pathos and his perception of stage effect. The character of Inbells is well conceived and worked out with great sympathy ocus is wan concerved and worsest out with great sympany. Her gradual yielding to the importunate advances of Villerry her second husband, and her grief and horror at the discovery that second managed, and nor greet and mortus at the uncovery man, her first husband, is allre, and has returned to her are depicted with considerable power and are not unworthy to be compared with passages of Fletcher The introduction of Isabella a compared with persons of exerciser. The introduction of sample and Birm's child is a stroke of dramatic genius, and must have materially strengthened the play as the same device has strengthened many a popular drama since. Indeed, The Fotal Marriage and Orosaoho may be regarded as the prototypes of a host of popular melodramas. Yet, though, on occasion, a master of stage popular inconstants. Ice, though, on observing a master or engage effect, Southerne never rises, and did not sapire to rise, above supplying the dramatio needs of his day. In another age, he night, suppaying the done better things for though he pandered to the reactions fastes of his audiences, he seems fully to have realised how for it was necessary to sink in order to gratify those tastes and ar is was necessary to sums in vivor to gramy three tennes and his best two plays.

Elkanah Settle and Thomas Shadwell were described by Dryden as

Two fools that cruich their feeble same on verse; Who, by my sense, to all succeeding times 1) Mt., My my means, to an succession stone Shall lies, in spite of their own dogmest rhymests and, in Settles case, at all events, the prophecy has come true. and, in occuses case, as an events, one proposed was come true.

Of the numerous publications which remain to above the fruits of or use numerous productations which remain to show the truits in his buly pen, scarce one is read to-day. He made a bid for success his only pen scarce one is read to-may the menor a new too accurate in almost every department of literature but he is only rememin annual ories) unpartitions of increasure out the is only consciu-bered as Does, the victim of some of the most acathing lines in English satirical poetry Settle began his career as a dramatist with the tragedy Settle began an career as a grammatint with the trageny Cambyses, King of Perma, produced, according to Downes by Countyses, a ray of rerace, promonen, accurating to nowness of Hetterton in 1000 when it met with communities success. It was followed by The Empress of Morocco not printed the south man reasonable by a see Despress of autorotic (1673). For a brief period, the latter play carried all before toys). For a cere period, the sector pury carried an nerior and the applanae bestored on it, together with the aband comparisons of Settle to Dryden, to the detriment of the latter comparisons or course to anything to one occurrence or two which it eroked, seem to have more or less throad Settles head. As a matter of fact, The Empress of Morocco owed its success mainly to the good offices of Rochester, who patronised Settle to annoy Dryden. It displays considerable ingenuity and knowledge of stage effect, always Settles strong point! The success of the play, and the pompous manner of its publication, drew forth some alumire Notes and Observations, said, by Dennis, to have been the foint work of Crowne, Dryden and Shadwell, to which Settle realied, and though Crowne claimed the lion's share of the attack, a paper war arose between Settle and Dryden.

The Empress of Morocco was succeeded by Lors and Revenue (1676) and Ibrahum, the Illustrious Bassa (1677), founded on Madeleine de Scudery's romance, turned by her brother Georges into a play of the same name. From that time until 1718. Settle produced a large number of plays, mostly bombastic tragedies of the poorest sort, the very names of which are now unfamiliar About 1680, he made the first of his several changes of political tenets and opened fire on the adherents of the court and catholic party his earliest patrons. The disgraceful play, The Female Prelate, marks this stage in his career In 1693, he was a tory once more, and involved himself in an acrimonious controversy concerning the poplah plot. In 1691, he was appointed city noet and in that expecity produced the annual percent on lord mayor's day of which the official printed record for several years is extant. In the duties of this office. Settle must have found himself at home, for the fertility of his acenic invention is undoubted. It was not, however, sufficiently incretive to keep him from want, nor did he turn his cost cleverly enough to profit greatly by these successive changes. He sank lower and lower and, at last, was obliged to write drolls for Bartholomew fair, and even, according to a tradition maliciously repeated by Pope to act in them himself. In 1718, the forlorn back found a haven in the Charterbouse, where he died early in 1794.

Before considering Nicholas Rowe, whose principal plays belong to the earlier years of the eighteenth century, we may mention the names of a few tragic dramatists of even slighter callbre than Elkanah Settles.

John Dennis, the butt of many of Pope s most savage sarcasms, but well equipped as a literary critic, was the father of a very

The principal interest which, at the present day attaches to this declaratory performance is due to the engravings which were published with the play in 1872, and which give a very good idea of the magnificance of the Dorset gurden theatre, both nicitive fora toochile.

* Wa Three Latters on the Genius and Writings of Shakespears (1711) were written R L VIII CH VIL

numerous literary progeny the dramatic section of which included tragedica, comedica and a masque. But, though he borrowed with oragonics, compound and a massive. Due, amongo no converse and equal freedom from Euripides, Tasso, and Shakespeare, his efforts Acts smoot anitotally authorought. In the closible hears of the sere season, managing unsuccessful in the casing years of the series with contary he produced the comedy A Plot and No Plot (1597), a satire on the Jacobites and Rinaldo and Armeda, a tragedy founded on Tasso, played in 1699.

Of the seven plays written by John Banks, the most successful were the Unhappy Fatourite or the Bart of Essee (1889) and Vertue Betray'd, or Anna Bullen, also acted in 1882. He recent to have been an admirer of Loo, and faithfully reproduced that to mayo occur an administ of 100, and instituting reproduced these authors a worst characteristics. Like Lee, he plundered the French numer a noise contractorments and acce, no pumarced and accordance romances, and, in 1006, brought out a play taken from Le Grand Correct His forts, however was melodrama based on English history, and, in this field, be enjoyed a great popular success.

John Hughes belongs, in point of time, to the next period, but his manner is compassically that of the restoration. Besides the operas Calypso and Telemachus (1712) and Apollo and Darkso operas catypeo and 1 consuces (1/12) and aposto and 10 consuces (1/16), he wrote a piece called The Sicos of Damascus, which was produced on the day of the author's death (17 February 1720), and produced on the mach approval. It owns much to D'Avenant s was received with minum approval. It twee minum to D Avenants.

The Greys (printed 1673) and its success, as well as that of Highes's other dramatic efforts, depends largely on the opportunities for other dramatio enterts, depends sargety on the opportunities for spectacular display which it affords. His plays, nevertheless, specialcular unipary suicu is anomas, une praya, norce menos, abow considerable power of construction, and are often forcibly and picturesquely written.

a pecurrenquery written. George Granville, lord Lanedowne, besides a diseatrons adaptation of The Merchant of Versee produced, in 1696, the councily entitled The She Gallants, and in 1698, Herone Lors, a tragedy entition and one trumping and in appeal according to the soft the soft the Both those pieces sounded to have been successful. His has effort, an opera entitled The British Enchanters, was produced by Betterton in 1706 and

Edward Ravemerof, though chieff a writer of comedy pro-Edward navenessus, many concern a writer of concern paradiced a tragleomedy called King Edgar and Alvinda (1677) and a tragedy The Italian Hutband, acted 1697 and full of horrors. a magenty are assumed assessment, sever any our run or nearons. It was probably suggested by a tale in Thomas Wright's The to man promises a more and an amount allower and addition (1686). Group to Gross and are creditable to Dennie prospection of the grantess of the physics with Callier Addison and Pope belong to the Elevisy theoretical votes the contract of the presence of the Callier Addison and Pope belong to the Elevisy thingspalse of these

Mrs Aphra Behn, though principally known through the medium of her comedies and novels, wrote several tragedies, the first of which, Abdalacze, or the Moor's Revenge (1877), was altered from Marlowes Lusi's Dominion! Mrs Manley who schieved an uncaviable reputation as a novelet, also produced several lurid tragedies, of which the first, The Boyal Muschief appeared in 1898. Thomas Rymer author of The Tragedies of the Last Age (1878) and of other critical work, in which he attacked the Elimbethan tragic poets, chiefly on account of their failure to observe the mittes, published, in 1878, one of the last rimed tragedies in Edyar, or the English Monarch, which strictly observes the classic roles.

Nicholas Rowe holds a unique position as forming a link between the late restoration dramatists and those of the Augustan age. For, though all his plays were produced in the early years of the eighteenth century his work is thoroughly typical of the drama at the close of the restoration period, and he is more at home with Banks and Southerne than with the writers of the age of Pope.

Born in 1674, in comfortable circumstances, Rowe, in due course, was called to the bar but soon abundoned law in order to devote himself wholly to literature. His first play The Ambitious Step-Mother, was produced, in 1700, at Lincoln's Inn fields by Betterton, and was well received. It is one of the large group of plays in which the scene is laid in conventionally eastern sur roundings. This was followed by Tauserians (1702), which, as a drams, is ineffective it has, however, a certain historic interest, for Louis XIV, the author tells us, was satirized under the name of Bajant—the villain of the piece, while the high-mided here, a sort of Admirable Orielton among princes, and much given to improving the occusion—was intended to personic William III. It was review yearly on 5 November the send-versary of the landing of William of Orange, until 1816.

Rowes next piece, The Furir Penitent (1703), proved case of the most popular plays of its time. It is borrowed, as to 51%, from Maninger and Field's The Fotol Downy (1837) by Evergreatly reduced the older play, omitted its force and far 77, 24, deluged his version with a moral tone which is all his own. This simple domestic drams, written, like Rowe's other tragedies, in sumper numerous manual, winter, may more other noscues, in rather flower blank terre, met with extraordinary success and was constantly before the public till 1825, or thereabouts. The author commend because the prologue that you shall meet with sources like promies in the prologue time you shall meet with sortows may four own. The public found that Rowe kept his word and to this fact, and to the rather cheap appeal of the last act, with this section to the charmel-house and the grave rather than to any depth of tracic power in the play the lonfather than to any deput of these posts in the pas, the same be attributed. The harghity falling gar Lotherio of this tragedy has become a familiar smooth for a heartless libertine, and was the model for Lorelace in tor a neuross meeting day was the mone are received in the eighteenth century:

As to her expected, see acce, pp. 140—2.
A Short Fire of Trapedy appeared in 1884. Hymer was appointed including appeared in 1884, and most appointed including appeared in 1884, and published 15 rolumes of his Factors between 1714 and in deal, in 1814. Of seet, with IX.

expression contary

Rowes solitary comedy The Buler produced in 1705, was a falling According to Johnson, the author's applaine was the and sound of approval heard in the theatre at its production our sound or approved means in two means as no procured it was succeeded by the tragedy Ulysses (1°00), a tedious as: it was succeed by the tractaly organs (t was a scenario an ineffective drains which lacks Rowe's urnal atrong appeal to the here are a success of the success of [170]—tery dull with a pockground of mythical British pistory—lark on an ammence services runs best not two modern constraints of the contract (1.0)—very cont, when a coccupround or injunion orman minory likeness to one another. The Trayedy of Jane Shore in initetion of Shakespeare sattle, produced in 1714, has been said to bear tion or Smalterpeare a serie, produced in 1/14, has been soluted one of open resemblance to Shakerpeare than is to be found in the to cureer resemble to consequence of the plans it is based upon an episode in the history of England It is, however a good seeing play which mutory or entirely disappeared from the stage. It af even now mas now connects comprehenses around the state of forded Mrs Siddons one of her most tremendous opportunities for realistic acting. As Jane Shore, drifting half-starred about the streets of London, ere witnesses report that the andience absolately thought her the creature perishing through want and

In the following ferr (1715) Rown succeeded Tate as poet an time notionally Jean (1 to thome successive as the humante and produced his hat play The Transedy of the Lody narrente and promeet an are pay the truyeng to the short and for some Gray This play as well as its predecessor and, to some work orny and pur as well as its processor sun, to some criteri, Rowe's other dramatic works, diplay a certain poblity of extent, nows a outer managing works, dulpsay a certain containt of purpose, in marked and refreshing contrast to the pruriency in which the English drams had for half a century been steeped. The unexceptionably moral and patriotic tone of Rows hast play, as well as its protestant spirit, affords a very striking proof of the change that had come over the English stage since the revolution and the publication of Jeromy Collier's Short Vicas.

I know the most interesting private were those by Gazzie in 114 and 7746. A should be most interesting retricts were those by Gattlet be 1144 and 1446, being he payed behavior, and those of 1172 and subsequent years when Mer Relieve, we can write the first state of the continuous state of the state of the continuous state of the state of when he formed inclinately, and those of 1777 and subsequent years when her accesses, as Calling, chartful plot and former, participately in the stone with Homses in the 1878 as a constant to a constant to the constant to as Caling, Cartifical the Entirence, particulity in the some with Horsels in the titler det, where he decrease her of being them in her kinds and his transf, different in the contract of the AC, YANG DE SCHEEL DE ST DESSE DE DE SERVICE LES ÀU DISSO, ALMOSON, LES LEC, A PRINT OF CLE F-AV SON PLAS, WHEN CAS CAST DECESSE HES SELLES AND DESSE, ALMOSON, LE CL. Y. M. L. Landson, F-AV SON PLAS, WHEN CAS CAST DECESSE HES SELLES AND BELLES.

Like Otway, Rowe attempted to move his audiences to pity and terror but with few exceptions, his dramas leave us cold and unmoved. He contrives situations with considerable skill. but he generally fails to make his characters rise to them nor do they give vent to their feelings in language which is always either touching in itself, or suitable to the surrounding circumstances. His plays are the calm and finished performances of an author who felt but faintly the emotions which he sought to portray and who, by the introduction of what he very aptly calls 'the pomp of horror, hoped to find his way to the feelings of his readers. Oriticism and the public taste, in fact, have alike moved for since Johnson wrote of Rowe's The Fair Pentient, There is scarcely any work of any poet at once so interesting by the fable, and so delightful by the language. He has, however, other claims to the respect of posterity. Of the algorificance of his edition of Shakespeare a works (1709), something has been said in an earlier volume1 while his translation of Lucan a Phoraclia, which was first published as a whole in 1718 (shortly after his death), and of which at least nine editions appeared between that date and 1822, is, probably, at the present day his least forgotten work. He also translated in verse Hollean's Intrin (1708). Rowe was an accomplished modern, as well as classical, scholar and his personality is one of dignity as well as of interest, in the history of English literature.

¹ See vol. v ahap. XI, pp. 257-4.

CHAPTER VIII

THE COURT POETS

The career of the Court Poets is an episode not merely in the history of literature but in the history of manners. In their live nation of interaction one in the matter) of manners, in their art, they were an outspoken protest against the domina tion of the puritant. Whatever their predecessors in their stern ton or the parities. "I majorer mean prevercesors in these second morality had distained, they pursued with a rare ferrency of spirit. The chief end of their ambition was to catch pleasure on the wing and they gare to pleasure a liberal interpretation. Gallanty was and they gate to because a mera interpretation. Datasity and the approval of His soluted in who had not given proof of his wif, who had not or ms sovereign wan men not given proof on me was, when men most first burned increase before the muse of frivolity. So it came paouery varied locates venere are more at investigation about that, in Sedley's phrase, every fop wrote some, that few acoust make in occurs a pursue, every top acous source, make tow refrained from libelling their friends in satire, and that a freedom for sure mean meaning their meaning in same, and this, a received in written, as in spoken, speech matched the prevailing freedom of

The court, in brief, cherished an ideal hitherto strange to no court, in usies, energines an mean minerto arrange w English austerity It no longer took a keen interest in rival policies. The bitter conflict of the civil war followed by the domination of the otter connect at the early war industry of the measurement of patriothen which burned only Outer nan ouscured the spain of particular which courses only in a few loyal hearts. The king and his courtiers were determined in a low loyal neutra.

Luo sing and his courtiers were determined to amuse themselves. They had learned in Paris how to temper to amuse memorites. Ancy not rearned in Large now we remine their magnificence with wit and politicase, and in the glamour of their magnificence with wit and positions, and, in the gramour of beauty and courage, they forgot the long, dark days when all beauty and courage, may torke the minimum that they were the after the decorative arts of life had been bunkled, when even the andle the decorative arm or any man need communed, when even one some of front was deemed a disgrace. Charles II, a monarch to whom or trony was occuped a unificate. Consider the amounted to second most things were easy save wisdom, led the land of rerellers. most tungs were casy same wascom, see the came or research preferred the ribaldry of Backhurst and Sedley to the grave advice of Arlington, sumtered away his days in the society of his or Aritmeton, samuered away ms ways in the society or maistreases, and delighted in satire, even though it was directed maximes, and designed in saline, even though it was unreview against himself. It was a golden age truly in which life seemed desirable for its own sale, and in which bobody thought of its desirance for the own search and in solicit potenti smoothis or the

Saint-Éiremond, ce sont les Français qui pensent, et les Anglais qui parlent. And at Whitehall which he graced by his presence for many years, he might have encountered them both.

Such is one side of the medal. The reverse is less attractive. If it were frivolity whose muse reigned in Whitehall, it was a If it were involved was rery little spontaneous galety in the court of the returned king. The intention to be gay was so loudly expressed that it seemed to come from the head rather than from the heart. The sense of relief the determination to be happy at all costs, suggest that a spice of malice flavoured the lovousness of the courtiers. In what they said and did there was no trace of the golden mean. Their merriment was too often the merriment of constraint. Rochester declares in one of his letters that it wasn't safe for a man to leave the court, if he didn t want to be hanged. The exploits set forth in the Mémoires de Gramont, are, so to say, conscious of reaction. Their persistent monotony fatigues us who read of them, as perchance they fatigued the courtiers who are their heroes. The king and his friends were too fisgrantly indestrious in the pursuit of pleasure. Gramont himself was not content to rely upon his own graces for success. He wood his goddenes with 'gloves, pocket looking-glasses, elegant boxes, apricot paste, essences, and other small wares of love. To be jealous without being in love, to play for stakes so high that they could not be paid without distress, to indulge in practical jokes which had no better excuse than physical infirmity—these are not the marks of happiness. They were the misfortunes of everyone who came within the circle of Whitehall. The manners of the time thus proved the best material for satire and comedy. There was, perhaps, more joy in their contemplation than in their exercise. Penys, who lived on the fringe of the Court, was gay because he carried his indomitable gaiety into the simplest affairs of his life. We can believe that there was a flash of genuine galety at Epsom. when Nell Gwynn and Buckhurat kept mery house there. But the pleasure of Charles II's court was marred by the inverse of puritanism. It was anstere even in its love-making. At times, the courtiers broke through all the bonds of restraint.

They thought it no shame to commit acts of violence in the streets. Once upon a time, Buckburst and his friends killed a tanner at Stoke Newington whom they suspected of theft, and whose pockets they emptied, as of stolen goods. A far worse scandal was carried by Sir Charles Sedley's amazing apparition at Oxford Kates in Bow street. He came in open day as Pepys tella us.

The Court Poets into the Balconic and aboved his sakedness and abosing of scripture and as it were from themes prescring a mountainear surmon from the partyr, anything that there he had to self such a powder as about make all the women saying store were no man to make our and our series a private as another many and the women from after him, 1,000 people standing undermatch to see and hour him, and ran after aim, 1,440 people manding montpeace to see and near aim, and that boding does he look a given of wine, and drank H off, and then took

It is not surprising that the unbridled conduct of Sir Charles Sedley and of Buckhurst, who was of the company came near to ocusey such or oursellings, who was to the court, and received cauning a rive must have been a most high reproof. The news of these prants, moreover went abroad, and lost nothing, we may be sure in the telling. The voice of scandal was notey and macrupa saile in the name and, though it is evident that the with were sons some as now and, enough it is ensured that two with work not innocent of brutality it is unfair to judge all their lives by one or two episodes. Harty generalization is ever the fee of truth, and charges are more lightly made than refuted. No man, for instance, energies are more uponly made than related. In the many not manufactures of his reputation as Rochester, and oren he are over so tarrices in in a letter addressed to Savile against an unfounded process in a sense approximate to corne against an universely indictment. Accused of the same folly as that of which Sedley and Buckhurst were guilty be was coper in excusa-

For the hideras deportment, he writes, which you have board of consern-For the hideesa deportment, he writes, which you have brord of concerning ranked, so much is true, that we want into the river conservation. ing running naked, so much is true, that we want into the river somewhat late in the year, and had a frisk fee forty yards in a meadow to dry ourselve. The trivial adventure was instantly turned to his disgrace, and so quely smallpo are pe of the happic contembs that pe confessed arm as the confessed arms of the happic contembs that the confessed arms of the happing contembs that the confessed arms of the happing contemps the happing contemps the happing contemps the happing contemps compay seminate was no or one priority contemps on the contrastor himself extremely revived at the receipt of a kind letter from an

I erer thought you an extraordinary man, says he, out treue. A erect satisfact, you an extraordinary man, says may and most now think you such a friend, who, being a courtier as you are, can love a man, whom it is the great mode to hate.

n are, can nove a man, which is no one great mosts or mand.

Nor was emergeration the only fee of the wita. Many there Ago was exactly cased the control of and Sodioy and who, by their acuseloss extravagance, brought their and octuloy and who, by such someoness carravagance, become and botters into contempt. When wit became a fashion, the fools could ape it, and the poets have been compelled ever since to bear a come ape is, and the process may be seen compensor over ance to seem a weight of unmerited odium. Pepps once strayed into the society of weight of unmertion comm. Arrive once strayed into the society or these pretenders, and their talk made even his bard heart scho. these pretenders, and seem take made even me many mean according to the local value of the local company was this, says be, that I was ting LOTH what curses roses company was time, says no, times was in to night, though fall of wit and worth a man a being in once to in to night, though into a sit and worth a man's come in once to know the nature of it, and their manner of talk, and lives. Penys s know too materic of it, and their mainter of talk, and fives. Triples curiosity no doubt got the better of his judgment, and the wit of cursouty no doubt gut the cetter or ms Joogness, and the wit or these men, who called themselves the Ballers, was probably as torse men, was cassed inclusives the patiers, was processly as false as their presence. They are memorable only because they did the poets an injustice—an injustice which no less a man than

•

Dryden has removed. None knew better than be their thients and their lives, and he treated them as true Augustans, praising their credition voluptates.

We have, said he, like the posts of the Horestin see, 'corr greinl nights, when our discourse is neither too serious nor too light, but always pleasant, and for the most part instructive; the sulliver neither too sharp upon the present, nor too censerious on the absent, and the cups only such as will rake the coavescution of the night, without distribuils the business of the morrow. As in dairy bound, he who had been admitted to these banquets of wit and sense defended them against the detraction of pedants. The wite said he, were insulted by those who knew them not.

As we draw giants and anthropophagi "—to cite his words—"in those vacancies of our maps, where we kare not travelled to discover better so those wretches paint levelness, atheism, folly filt-conoming and all manner of " extravaroness amongst on, for wast of knowing what we are.

It was not difficult to rebut precise charges. The wits, described by the ignorant, were the fops whom Dryden and his friends bunkhed. As for blaspheny and attacking, even if they were not ill manners, they were worn threadbare. In other words, the true wits are blassed for the excesses of those who had never tasted the waters of Helicon.

If the court poets needed a defence, they could not have found a wiser juster defence than Dryden a. But even when they have been relieved of the crimes of which others were culty there is another misunderstanding which should be dispelled. The bentalities of Rochester, Buckhurst and Sedley were the bentalities of a fierce, unscrupulous youth, and mere incidents in long and honourable careers. To pretend that these courtiers carried their pranks into a ripe old age is to endow them with perpetual strength and high spirits. Rochester it is true, died on the very threshold of middle life. The rest grew sober with the years. Buckharet was presently transformed into a grave and tacitum man, well versed in affairs, and entrusted, in William III's absence, with the regency of the kingdom. Sedley, too, turned politician, was rufley of reflections on our late proceedings and delivered speeches upon ways and means. In luief, the court poets were like those who, in other times, shared their talent and temperament. They selsed life with both hands, and wrung from it at each stage whatever of varying case and pleasure it held.

And they were men of action as well as men of letters. There was scarcely one of them that had not taken arms in the service of their country. They proved their gallantry on the field of battle as on the field of lotte. In later years, a charge of cowardice was brought against Rochester The bravery of his youth is beyond dispute. He was but seventeen when he went to see with Lord Sandwich, and on board The Revenue, took part in the famous attack upon Bergen, where the Dutch ships had taken refuge. Of this action he left a spirited account in a letter addressed to his mother A year later he was in the great sea fight, serving under GIT Edward Spragge, and there gave a signal proof of his courage.

During the action, mays Burnet, Sir Edward Sprage, not being satisfied Which the action, may harpet, for Edward Sprage, no come summer this the behaviour of one of the Capitalas, could not easily find a Ferron, that with the betation of one of the Uspians, could not easily find a Farmon, time would observely rentires through so much darper to carry his commands to would observely returns through so mean caught to carry his communication that captain. This Lord offered hisself to the service, and wast in a fitting that the captain is a fitting to the service, and wast in a fitting that the captain is a fitting to the captain in the captain is a fitting to the captain in the captain is a fitting to the captain in the captain is a fitting to the captain in the captain is a fitting to the captain in the captain is a fitting to the captain in the captain is a fitting to the captain in the captain is a fitting to the captain in the captain in the captain is a fitting to the captain in the capta Lax capata. The Lord oldered abused to the service, and when in a name of the chot, and delivered his message and retained back to Buckhurst was not a whit behind Rochester in courage he was precent, a volunteer on the duke of York's ship in the lattle of A June 1665, when the Dutch admiral's ship was blown up with all hands. But it was kinigrare who saw more active service than any of them. At the age of seventeen, he was on board the ship which prince Rupert and Albernatic Jointy commanded against the Dutch, and, when the war was brought to a close, he was given a troop of horse to guard Dover At the next outbreak of war he a study is noted to guard source. As and make outsorder of war no war again at sea with his kineman, the carl of Oscory on board was again as son when he chose, as Dryden says in a passage of unconscious humour to abundon these delights, to which his youth commons numour to assume unuse uniques, to which are Journal of Invite him, to undergo the hazards, and, which and so the company of common seamen. And so brarely did was worse, and company or common seamon. And so orsarry on the bear himself that he was given the command of The Kathariae, the best of all the second rates. Nor was this the end of his the was presently colonel of the regiment of foot minery career are not presently convert or and regument or soon which the own cure to make taken, were too for substance in experience and finally in 1680, went to the order ocnowing and surrence and many in 1000, went to the relief of Tangler with two thousand men, and was trimphantly successful.

There is thus a strong uniformity in the lives of the wits and nero is than a strong amountly in the firm than the service of posity was oven a croser own our secul them than the service of their king. They essayed the same tasks, they saig the same their sing. Iney emayer the same tasks, they sang the same times, each in accord with his own talent. They composed protimes, each in accord which has used contained they laid sacrifications hands upon the agains for ment themes and Fletcher which they changed to suit works of marcapeare and rietener which they enabled to suit the humour of the quality. They wrote songs in bosons of the numour or time quanty anny wrote sough in account of Corinna and Phyllis, Chloris and Olinda. They delighted in an Cornana and a niputs, conorns and Onnora. Anny designated in an instability of phrase which kept their possion harmoned to good sense. Only in satire did they give a free rein to their eager antipathies and generous impulses. They played with the counters of an outworn chasicism, and attempted to pass off 'Cupid, Bacchus and the rest as the current coins of poetry They bowed the knee to the same masters, and believed that originality consisted in the imitation of Horace and Bolleau. Yet, for all their study they were, for the most part, amateurs. Wit is a good diversion but buse trade, said Sedley and, with the exception of Rochester, a born man of letters, not one of them had the power of casticating his verses into perfection. It was not for these happy triffers to con their manuscripts by day and night, to guard them for ten years from the eager eye of the public. They threw them off in their hours of ease, and did not make them proof against the attack of time. They were precisians without being precise. They followed those whom they considered the best models. The Stagyrite is ever on their toneues, and if they could they would have obeyed his laws. Their highest ambition was to equal Horace. But they could not be at the pains to use his file. It is the true mark of the amateur to begin a work as a poet and to end it as a versifier They had happy thoughts these court poets they hit upon ingenious images an elegance of phrase was not beyond their reach. What they found almost impossible was to sustain the level of their inspiration. When Sedley begins a song with the lines.

Love still has something of the eas, From whence his mother ross, you are reminded of the Greek anthology, and think you are in the presence of a little masterpiece. But the poot soon local interest in his work, and relies upon the common words and familiar metaphors of his day. Even at the third line, 'No time his slaves from doubt can free, the illusion is dispelled. And it is this carcinomean, characteristic of them all, which makes it difficult to distinguish the works of one from another, and explains the many false inscriptions, which perplex the reader 'Lord Dorect and Lord Rochester says Pope, should be considered as holiday writers, as gentlemen that diverted themselves now and then with poetry rather than as poets. From this condemnation, Rochester must be excluded. His energy and concentration entitled him to be judged by the highest standard. The others cannot resent a wise and just sentence.

This union of poetry with the court had one evil result. It involved literature in an atmosphere of coxcombry Social

The Court Poets eminence appeared the very inspiration of Apollo. To descree the bays nothing was noncessary save to be a person of honour. All the resources of eloquent flattery were exhausted in the peake of noblemen who condescended to poetry. Criticism was thus polsoned at its source. A poet should be judged by his poetry principles as its source a piece starting to junger up and process.

The accidents of his life should not be permitted to cloud our judgment. To find a peculiar virtue in a countier's verses is no better and no worse than to hall a farmer's boy as a man of gentus merely because he follows the plough ony as a men in general money occasion no common and and it is difficult to read the contemporary eulogies of Buckhurst, Millgrave and the rest with patience. Of course the utmost latitude may be granted to dedications. No writer is upon cath when he addresses a dedicatory epistle to friend or patron, and if only he content pinself with making a banconic of parton area or content pinself with making a banconic or remark or beautiful area. out no contrary minimum vital meaning a particular or me parameter out no contrary minimum vital meaning a particular or me parameter out no contrary minimum vital meaning a particular or me parameter of the pa Character or person no marin is using white a pressure Manuscon is observed. When, for instance, Sir Francis Fanc assures Rochester that, after his charming and most instructive conversation, be finds himself, not only a better poet, a better philosopher bot, much more than these, a better Christian, you smile, as, no doubt, Rochester smiled at Sir Francis Fanes temerity and lack of humour You cannot anile when Dividen, who should have been namon: And cannot make the rest services of praise, a ang among enous an, secure to one very secretaries or praces, not according in the language of extra readon not their graces, not accaming in the anguage of canaragance not men graces, not their still flung lightly across the table, but their poetry. In this honouring Buckhurst and Mulgrare, he distom poors the craft of which he was a faithful follower and his noncours too crais or summer up was a samural movement and summer offence is less against humour than against truth. To confess at outnot is less against uninous unan against union so comesses, the outset as Dryden confesses, that the Court is the best and the viscos as arrives comesses, that the votes as the vest and serious of writing, is a mere hyperbole, which may be surer lange or wroning is a more appearone, which may be excused. His praise of Rochester rague though it be, displays all the vice of a false judgment.

Wit, he writes, seems to have ledged that! more nobly in this age, then With he writes, seems to have designed these races money in this say, times any of the former and the people of my means condition are only written and the people of my means condition are only written. in any of the former and the people of my mean condition are only writers becomes some of the soldilly and your Lordship in the first place, are above

The statement is abject in humility yet still without pretence to toe successis a super in minimity Jet sum without presence to crificiam. He goes furthest actiny when he speaks of Buckhurst. Critical to goes intuities among visco to speaks of intransactions. It is Backburst the poet, not Backburst the courtier that he extels, and thus upon every line that he derotes to his friend, he keys the foundation of error. He congratulates himself that he was are commenced on earner are comprehensive answers to as we was order to receive the country of the greatest grains, the truest judge, and the best patron.

Never for a moment does be heatiste to compare him with the greatest. He declares that Buckhurst forgives the many fallings of these, who, in their wretched art, cannot arrive to those heights, that he possesses from a happy abundant, and satire genius: which are as inhorn to him, as they were to Shakespeers, or for aught I know to Homez.

So he sets him high above all living poets. 'Your Lordahip, says he, 'excels all others in all the soveral parts of poetry, which you have undertakee to adorn. And, again 'the most rain, and the most ambitious of our age have yielded the first place without dispute. As his lyrio poems are 'the delight and wooder of this age, so they will prove the envy of the next. And it is of satire that he is 'the most perfect model. If I have not written better, confesses Dryden, 'it is because you have not written better, confesses Dryden, 'it is because you have not written better, remiley, in a comparison of ancient and modern, he divides the wreath of glory between Shakespeare and Buckhurst. 'This age and the last, he declares, especially in England, have excelled the ancients in both these kinds, and I would instance in Shakespeare of the former in your Lordahip of the latter sort. What boots it, after this enlogy, to call Buckhurst the king of poets! It would have been less mischlerous to call him the king of mee.

With the same recklessness of adulation, Dryden praises Milgrave's Bessy of Poetry He read, it, he says, with much delight, as much instruction and not without some enry He assures his patron that the anonymity of the work was 'not altogether so fair give me leave to say as it was politic. The motive was clear enough.

By concealing your quality' writes Dryden, 'you might clearly understand how your wark successed, and that the guarant approaching was given to your morit, not your title. Thus, like Apollon, you stood unseen behind your now Youns, and reodred the praises of the possing multitude; the work was commended, not the author; and I doubt not, this was one of the most pleasing advantages of your life.

It was not like Mulgrave to remain long in the dark, and the adventure, if pleasing, was soon over As for Dryden, he could sink lower (or rise higher) even than this in the scale of adulation. A couplet upon Mulgrave remains, his meaterpiece of bettos

> How will sweet Orich ghost be pleased to hear His fame augmented by an English pear!

The poets themselves, being men of the world, knew what value to put upon Dryden's panegyrics. The best of them, Rochester and Buckhurst, treated their own poems with a lighthearted disdain.

They left others to gather up the flowers which they scattered with and sens owners to genuer up the numers which may accurate which are to be accounted artists, let it be in life not in rosse. Poetry was but an optsode in their multiin me nor in verse, rucery was our an example in more more coloured careers and, though we may whely neglect the lives of greater poots, with them, criticism inevitably becomes biography greater poots, with them, crisicism moviency occurses inography John Wilmot, earl of Rochester the one man of undisputed genins among them, will over be memorable for the waywardness and complexity of bis character for the vigour and energy of his retre-Few poets have suffered more acutely than he from the flattery of Area (Areas mayor amore acusery man as from one manay to friends or the disdain of enemics. The lofty adulation offered at his youthful shrino was soon turned to a riolent malignity and, in and you trust surrow was soon turned to a turned managemy sand, in the clash of opinions it is not casy to discogage the truth. He was the cash of opinions it is not easy to obscurage the truto. He was born in 1647 at Ditchley near Woodstock the sun of the pleasureours in 1924 se principles Henry Wilmot who fought for his king. toring, wary amountous menty 11 most who longue for his aing and who after Worcester shared the wanderings and hardships and who siter violenter source use wasserings are instruments of Charles II. Educated in grammar learning at Burford, in or cuaries in cuscated in grammar scarning at number, in Oxfordshire, he entered Wadham college in 1659 was created a Outormanic, no entered warman conego in 1000 was created a master of arts in 1601 at which time he, and none cise, was ad master or arts in 1001 at which time he, and more case, was an mitted very affectionately into the fraternity by a kin on the left mitted very aneconomicity into the university by a sim on the interest of the University (Clarendon), who then coeek from the commonion of the commonion (Consension), who then sate in the supreme chair to become that Assembly A vertiable ante in the supreme chart to heaven the assenting a verticule child of the mases be lisped in numbers. At the age of twelve, he canno or non municipal de inspect de inspectation de copy of remea to his Sacred Majority on acurement a responsable copy of resear to the caused analysis of his Restoration, and mourned in English and Latin the death of his iteratornion, and mounted in Linguish and Latin see occase of Mary princess of Orange. Having taken his degree, he travelled Mary Princes of Urango Maring maked his degree no traveled in France and Italy and, at eighteen, returned to England and in France and 10117 and, at eighteon, returned to augment and the court, a finished scholar and an accomplished gouldman. the court, a minancu scross, and an accumplished gentleman.

None of the courtiers who througed Whitehall made so brilliant an appearance as Rochester All the gifts of nature were his.

He was a graceful, well-shaped person, may librart, tall and well made and what has a manual hadron serious to him. He was a graculal, wall-shaped perces, says Bornet, tall and well made.

He was caucily well-bred, and was by a ground behaviour ratars! to him. He was exactly well-bred, and what by a modest behaviour satural to him, what by a civility become almost as natural, his conversation was easy and obliging

He had a talent of intimacy and permastreness, which none could He mad a fateris of internacy and persuastreness, which more course resist. Even when his words lacked sincerity they won the hearts of his hearers.

If coire data one goods, said a yearan, who was not in lors with him, done It carrie dans the gours, and a wearan, who was not in form with him, dans for the manufact, a classic government, who was not in form with him, dans the contract of the cont

He gained an easy ascendancy over the court and assumed all the He gained an easy accessancy over the court and assumed as two freedoms of a chartered libertine. Once upon a time, as Pepps tells us, he had a difference with Tom Killgrew, whose car he boxed in the presence of the king. This burbarous conduct, says the diary, do give such offeres to the people here at court, to see how cheap the king makes himself and the more, for that the king bath not only passed by the thing, and pardoord it to Bochester already, but this very morning the king did publishy walk up and down, and Bochester I saw with him as fee as ever to the kingle vertheiting shame, to have so this a rope als ecompation.

Not even the people at court could for long harbour a feeling of resentment against the insolence of Rochester Charles himself was ever ready with a pardon. Though he banished Rochester many times from his presence, he as often recalled him. The truth is that, in Burnet's words, 'the King loved his company for the diversion it afforded him. Little as Charles appreciated the bitter satires upon 'Old Rowley he could not but forgive the satirist. Though Rochester professed a batred of the court, it was the only place in which his talents found a proper freedom, and he always returned thither, so long as his health lasted. Nor was it only the licence of his speech that involved him in disgrace. At nineteen, to repair the sole deficiency of his lot, he had seized upon Mrs Mallett, a great beauty and a great fortune, by horse and foot men, put her 'into a coach with six horses, and two women provided to receive her, and carried her away. The king, who had tried in rain to advance the match, was mighty angry, and sent Rochester to the Tower But the triets herititre, as Gramont calls her did not long withstand the fierce suit of her lover and Rochester as his letters show, made a reasonably fond husband. Indeed, though after the adventure what most strongly attracted him was the lady's fortune, he honourably reneuted of his greed. and presently tells her that her money shall always be employed for the use of herself and those dependent on her so long as he can get bread without it.

Adventure, in truth, was the passion of his life. When he could not seek it in the field of battle, he must find it perforce in the tame atmosphere of the court. He had a perfect gentus for disguise, and delighted to assume the likeness now of a porter now of a beggar. Like the true histrion that he was, he neglected no part of his craft, and entered into the very akin of the character be chose to Impersonate.

Sometimes to follow some mean amount, says Bernet, which for the vasity of them he affected, at other times merely for diversion, he would go about in old shapes, in which he sated his part so naturally that even these who were in the secret and any kim in these chapte could perceive nothing In one of his bankshments, he and the duke of Buckingham, also in in one or me consuments, he and no make or nuranguam, and in disgrace, found as first to let on the Newmarket road. Entering magnetic, manner and man we see our see or towns are town and the form spirit of mangnerade, they took the hm, and each in time biased the bart of randous resolutions and the business of in turn payor the part or someone was with the property and then to get what sport they might out of the sound their are than the whole country aide to frequent feast, and sames, step turned an wave countrysine to iteliants toward, and with the help of their neighbours, exacted a verifiable comedy. At and the major mean mentioned of a wood nymph, compared with any tochester occasio enautoureu or a wood nympu, camparen niew whom Salmacia was not more charming, and whom he visited in whom comments was not more very many and makes no the fart of an old goodlewoman, thus giving the court the matter of not a little goads, before the king, passing by that road to New or not a meno guessity occurs and along passing of almost occur or new market, took him into favour again. But his greatest exploit in this kind was to set himself up in Tower street for a German (or are and was to see minion up in a coast succes for a normal for foundest secrets of nature and promised infallible remedies for every disease. His success in the city was immediate, and his fance overy uncase. This success in the city was minimizate, and in same so quickly spread to the other end of the town that the confidence so quincily spream to see orner cast or any town seast one contracts flocked to hear his elequence and to profit by his wisdom. So well nocaton to near me conjugate, that his nearest friends did not know thin and, as Hamilton tells us, but for an accident he would have mm and, as casiminon tens on, our for an accument no women marchine and Miss Price among his patients. None knew petter than he how to peat the drim and to file the besseraby into his booth. As Alexander Bendo, he pot himself high above the buttard-race of quacks and cheats. He was ready to care the aplem and all the other ills of mankind. Above all, he declared aprent and an uso ounce me or managing. According to occasion that he had learned in a long sofourn abroad how art assists trat no nau sourced in a milit selection account now are assumed in the preservation of Beauty Under his treatment women of forty should bear the same counterance as girls of affects or 1011 mount was the same countries as a few or mount. There was no miracle of embellishment that he would not under There was no miracie of emoculaments that he would not under take. I will also preserve and cleanse your toeth, he boasted, white and round as pearls fastening them that are loose. And auto and tound as beauty resemble comments on the same ready to confer

Now should Galen bimself look out of his grave, and he, and full me Now should Gales bimself look out of his grave, said be, and ten me these are bankles below the preference of a physician. I would lookly savere these are bashies baser the preference of a physicism, I would loidly answer bin, that I take more given in preserving God's image in its unblemtides. his, that I take more givey in preserving God's image in its unblamished beauty upon one good face, than I should do in patching up all the decay'd

That is in the proper key of extraragance, and it is not wonderful that confliers and citizens alike sought out Alexander Bende at bis lodgings in Tower street, next door to the sign of the Black

Thus it was that he spent the interludes of enforced exclusion from court. Nothing could tame the ardent galety of his spirita, or check his boltstrous love of life and pleasure. His tireless wit came to the aid of his inclination, and his deep knowledge of literature made him welcome even among the serious. Life Gramont, he wought joy everywhere, and carried it with him into every company. His unwearded curiosity sustained him in the most harstdous adventures and taught him how to make light of the worst misfortunes. Burnet declares that he had conquered his love of drink white upon his travels, and that, falling once move into a society that practiced every sort of excess, he was brought back to it again. It is probable that no vast persuasion was necessary. His constant disposition was toward gulety and might, and the natural bent of his favey to quote Burnet's word, made him so extrangeautly pleasant, that many to be more diverted by that hance stocked to sayage him deeper and deeper in intemperance which at length did so entirely subdes him, that, as he told me, for fire years together he was continoilly drank.

When Burnet wrote these words, he desired, no doubt, to make the worst of Rochester The greater the sin was, the greater the conversion. And thus it was that Rochester's rices became legendary, that Rochester hinself was chosen as an awful example of domoniacal nomine. I shad of borry to frighten children withat

Yet far worse than his manifold intemperance, in the eyes of his contemporaries, were his principles of morality and religion. Evelyn found him a very profane wit, and, doubtless, he took a poculiar pleasure in shocking that amiable philosopher. Worse than all, he was a perfect Hobbits, and, upon his Hobbitsm, his glaring vices seemed but errocesson spots. He freely owned to Burnet, with a smille, let us hope, that though to talked of norolity as a first thing yet this was only because be thought it a decent way of spouling and that as they went always in sinches thought in their frolles they would have chosen sometimes to have gone naived, it thought in their frolles they would have chosen sometimes to have gone naived, it was not become the second of the people with the property of the pr ha in prose, so in versa, Rochester delighted to outrage his critica. Dryden charged him with self-aufficlency, and out of his mouth he might have convicted him. Thus writes Rochester in An Equatory Essay

Born is superit, I Min superit alone; And must conclude my Jadgment good, or none; For cord my Sense he nearly, how should I know Whather another Han's were good or no. If then I'm happy what does it advances Whether to Merit dae, or Arrayson?
Why they will take Offence thereby!
Why then the World shall saffer for %, see L.

But it was not the world which suffered. It was Rochester Like all men who set out to automath the citizen, to put the worst possible construction upon his own words and acts, he saw his addidanct rise superior to the prejudice of Rochester's properties. He, too thought that Rochester's intervals of study and gross semsuality and thus proved how long endures the effect of mystification.

As has been said, it is difficult in the clash of opinions to disensage the character of Rochester Fort supple, fort orderer dans see propose of see forits—such is Hamilton's Judement.

There has not hyd in many Agra (If ever) so artenordinary and I think? many Agra (If ever) so artenordinary and I think? here, whether we consider the constant avoid forms, and the agreement according to the security of th

-so says Wolseley his loyal panegyrist. Somewhere between these two extremes the truth will be found. Rochester was as a subject that the medial as he was fort twoire for former. He was san, not a monster a man of gening moreover and in his bours, a man of rare simplicity and candour. A good triend, a kind, if fickle, over he has left behind in his letter as beeter proof of his clare than either obloquy or enlogy affords. He correspond them the subject with the sadness which underlay his mirth, retained a single simple si

Darry he writes, 'the not the head of my Happiness, that I think yees that the first all my perfendence is to make it appear that I think yees in the name of Fr. and, without which is he a real groot upon earth. The are are if any of without which is he are found upon earth, the are are if any of the control of the same of the control of the same of the control of the same of

His letters to his wife, moreover exhibit us a Rochester that has biliherto been obscured from view Whimsienl, humorous, ironic be

ł

appears in them also, but something else than the cynical hunter after pleasure. He shows himself curious concerning the details of household management. He discusses cats and coal, deplores the want of ready cash, which is hard to come by and hopes his wife excuses him sending no money for till I am well enough, thus be writes, to fetch it myself, they will not give me a farthing, and if I had not pawn d my plate I believe I must have starr'd in my alckness. Here, indeed, is an unfamiliar Rochester in dire straits of poverty pawning his plate to keep his restless soul within its case, and nearer to the truth, perhaps, than the monster painted in their blackest colours by anxious divince.

Two episodes in Rochesters career have involved him in charges of diabonour from one of which he cannot emerge with credit. In both, Mulgrave was engaged, and it is easy to believe that the antipathy which separated the two men was innate and profound. When neither of them was of age, Mulgrave, being informed that Rochester had said something malicious of him, sent colonel Aston to call him to account. Rochester proved, even to Mulgraves satisfaction, that he had not used the words, but Mulgrave thought himself compelled by the mere rumour to our anuguate the quartel. He owned his persistence feelish, and Rochester as it was his part to choose, elected to fight on horseback. They met at Knightsbridge, and Rochester brought with him not his expected accord, but an errant life-guards-man, whom nobody knew Aston objected to the second as an unsuitable adversary capecially considering how well he was mounted. And, In the end, they agreed to fight on foot. Whereon, Rochester declared that he had at first chosen to fight on horseback, because he was so weak with a certain distemper that he found himself unfit to fight at all any way much loss on foot. Accordingly no fight took place, and Mulgraves second lost no time in spreading a report injurious to Rochester upon whom henceforth was fostered a reputation for cowardios. The charge is not fully sustained. Rochester, it accume, was too weak to fight a foot, Mulgrave objected to fight on horseback, being worse mounted. A little ingenuity might have turned the blame on ofther side, and Mulgrave, by bis own confession, was persisting in a quarrel which had no justification. But Rochester with his customary oynicism, sbrugged his shoulders, and replied to the charge of cowardice with a famous Morely for safety after Pame they thirst, For all men would be Cowards if they darst.

The origin of his quarrel with Dryden is by no means creditable to his honour or his generosity

He had a particular pique to him, says Saint, Erremond, after his suightly storem in the Town, either because he was emailed, that he deterral as suignly success in the Town, either because he was seminis, that he describe not to supplices for his Tragedles, which the mad, enthicking and entering and the or out of indignation of having any rival in reputation.

Whatever might be the cause of Rochester a malice, its effect was to seet up Crowno in opposition to Dividen, a piece of impadence which nothing put Rochesters influence at court could have carried of And no sooner had Crowne enjoyed his unwarranted success than Rochester withdrew his favour as if he would still be in contradiction with the Town, and in that, says Saint-Evremond with uncontested truth, he was generally in the right, for of all Audiences in polito Nationa, perhaps there is not one which judges so very in points various, permans there is not one which junges as fell falsely of the drams. With this piece of injustice Rochester was not content. If he had been, An Essay on Satire soon gave him as he thought, another ground of anger That he should have as no toongut, another ground of anger than the another many afterbated this piece of weak and violent spite to Dryden speaks actionics the person weak and reactive space or projuct space.

He might have discerned the hand of Mulgrare the drive critical in the major trace the drive drive and the same of the complete. At any rate, merery une. remaps no nemotes them accompanies. At any rate, as Dryden was going home one night from Will's to his lodging, as trijucu nas going nome one mens nom runs to me soughis, he was wayleld by a pack of rufflams and soundly beaten. There ne was waysast up a fairs of runnam and southly owner. There is no doubt that Rochester was guilty of the outrage. His guilt stands confessed in a letter to Savile he, that I am out of favour with a certain poet If he fall on me at the Blunt, which is his very good Weapon in Wit, I will You write me word, says me at the mainty since is the Reported to Black Will, with a Cadgel. The punishment he meted out to Mulgrare was better Conget. And purmament no mercu out to sungrate was correct deserted, and delivered in rerse. As for Dryden, whose gening as whose age should have protected him, he passed by Rochester with a single reference. An author of your own quality whose which a suggest electrical on author or your own quanty whose ashes I will not disturb, he wrote to Buckhurst, with a magnanimity which, even at this distance of time it is hard to condona.

At the sgc of thirty three Rochester died, his wild onts sown, and his mind turned to ampler purposes. Though his opiles and his name current to surprise Particles.

Amongo the competency his wit began to frame and fushion temper was sum unconquerco, me was organ to trame and maures itself to public business. As one of his friends tells us, he was informing binnell of the Wisdom of our Lows and the excellent Constitution of the English Government, and spoke in the Home of Peers with general Approbation. That he would erre have or reers with benefit appropriate.

Stown into a staterman is unlikely

The search of his life had grown into a sunterment in uninery and semination in me me destroyed his anthority. Resides, he was a poet, to whom politics would over have seemed a base trade. What he did for the solace of his reputation was to make an cilifying cod, and to prove a chance of extertation to two divines. That these worthy men made him out rather worse than he was is probable. Burst, at any rate, told us something of him by the way and set forth his views with impartiality. So much may not be said of the Rev Robert Parsons, who merely handed him over, as an inverted here to the authors of the chapbooks.

Such was the life and death of one who set forth his character in his writings with the atmost candour. Though he was never at the mains to cather together his flying sheats, though he is said on his deathbod, one hopes falsely to have desired the destruction of his poems, it is his poems which still give us the true measure of his genius. Yot, even here, misunderstanding has nursued him. The worst that he wrote has been acclaimed to he the heat. Johnson declares that the strongest effort of his muso is his poem entitled Aothena' a piece of ingenuity unworthy his talent. Still more foolish has been the common assumption that Rochester's poems are unfit to be read. In some few he reached a height of outspoken cynician rarely scaled by an English nock. But the most of his works may be studied without fear and judged upon their very high merits. Tonson's collection contains more than 200 nages, and amply justifies the claim, made for it by Rymer that it consists 'of such pieces only as may be received in a virtuous court. and not unbecome the Cabinet of the severest Matron.

It was in satire above all that Rochester excelled. For this kind, he was richly endowed by nature and art. He had studied the ancient models with containcy and understanding. The quenchless vigour of his mind found its best expression in castigating the vices and folibles of humankind, which he knew so well. His daring and malice equalled his vigour, and he attacked Charles II, the Royal Angler, or Nelly the reigning favourite, with as light a heart as he brought to the demolition of Bir Car Scroop, the purblind knight. He wrote the heroid complet with a life and freedom that few have excelled, and the most that can be said in his dispraise is that, like the rest of the courtlers, he knew not the me of the file. Rochester and Andrew Marrell, with the voice not of fattery but of criticism, is the only men in England who issa

¹ Reiding as a theme was iong a sommorphon. Johnson compares with Bochestar's rense Passent's Latin pour MASS (1987). Two years below Passents, filt Edward Dyer had written a tract in prons, The Property Reiding, which had congested a synthetic property of property of the property

the true vein of Sattre, and Marvell in speaking of sattre, spok of an art which he himself had practised with success. And the Rochester looked upon satire as an art is evident from the answer which he gave to Burnet, who objected that revenge and falsehood were its blemishes.

A man, said be, could not write with life, unless he were bested with Bernage, for to make a Settre without Resembants, spon the cold Nations of Philosophy, was as if a man would in cold blood extracts threats, who had Derror affended him. And he said, the just in these Lifetie same often in an owns meaning that could not be spared without spoiling the beauty of the Peem.

His masterpiece, without doubt, is A Sature against Manhand. Imitated from Boilean, it bears in every line the impress of Rochester's mind. The energy of its thought and style separator it sharply from its original, and, if you compare the two works, you may find a cine to the difference between French and English. The one is marked by order moderation, and good sense. The other moves impetuous like a torrent, and sweeps out of its way the prejudices of all time. In cynical, closely argued contempt of man this sadire is unmatched in expression, it surpasses the most vivid of Rochester's works. The demunciation of reason,

Which leaves the light of Nature, Semen, behind, is a purple passage of English poetry in which the optimist can take no delight. Its conclusion is the very quintessence of hope-

The misgaided follower climbs with pain Hountains of Whitnesse heaped in his own brain;

Then old Age and Experience, hand in head, Apen not age and dispersions, some in seaso, lead him to Death, and make him understand, After a Scarch so pointal, and so long. That all his life he has been in the wrong.

Like many of his contemporaries, Rochester followed Hornce in making verse a vehicle of criticism. His Allusion to the Tenth Satire of the First Book may be said to contain his literary preferences. With cardour and sound Judgment, be characterises the most eminent of his contemporaries. He declines to be blindly partial to Dryden, defends Jonson and Shakespeare against detraction, ridicules the tedious scenes of Crowns, whom he had used as the instrument of his jealomy and detects a sheer original in Etherogo, who returned the compliment by painting him as Dorlmant. He finds the right epithets for heaty Stadwell and slow Wycherley chooses Buckhurst for pointed satire, and extols the 'gentle prevailing art of Sir Charles Sedley For the uncritical populace, he expresses his frank contempt. 'I leathe the rabble, says he, 'tis enough for me

It Sedley Shadwell, Sheppard, Wycherley Godolphin, Betler Buckhuret, Backingham Appears my Sense, I coust their Censure Fame.

It is Rochesters added distinction that, almost alone in his age, he wrote lyrics touched with feeling, even with passion. Though, at times, he makes sport of his own inconstancy though, like the rest, he rimes kisses with 'blisses and 'heart with 'amart, he could yot write or, still better those lines to his mistress, which begin, 'Why dost thou shade thy lovely face, and which none of his fellows approached. Here, the motre is as far boyond their reach as the emotion

An Age in her Embreces part, Would seen a Winter's Day:

Thou art my Way: I wander if thou fly Then art my Light: if hid, how blind am L. Thou art my Life: if thou withdrawst, I die!

Nor abould over be forgotten that masterplees of heroic irony The Haus & Debuschee, who, like a brave admiral, crawing to the top of an adjacent hill, beholds the battle maintained, when fleets of glasses sail around the board. You can but say of it, as of much else, that it bears the stamp of Rochester's vigour and almostivy in every line, and that he alone could have written it.

Sir Charles Sedley if he lacked Rochester's genius, was more prosperously endowed. He was rich as well as accomplished, and outlived his outrageous youth, to become the friend and champion of William III. Born in 1639, he preceded Rochester at Wadham college, and came upon the town as poet and profligate at the restoration. Concerning his wit, there is no doubt. Perpy pays it a compliment, which cannot be gained. He went to the theatre to hear The Maddes Trapedy and lost it all, listening to Ecsley's discourse with a masked lady 'and a more pleasant remembre I never heard, and his exceptions against both words and promouting very pretty. Dryden describes Sedley as a more elegant Thoulus, whose eelegy by Horace he applies to him

Non tu corput oras sine pectore: Du tilo forman, Dii tibi divities dederant, extenque fruenda.

He applands above all the candour of his opinions, his dislike of consortonmens, his good sense and good nature, and proclaims the accussitions brought against him as a fine which fortune sets upon all extraordinary persons. It is certain that, with the years, his gravity increased, and the quip which he made to explain his heatility to James II, who had taken his daughter for his mitrees, and made her countoes of Dorubester, was but an echo of his lost youth. 'I hate ingratitude, said he, 'the King has made my daughter a countees. I can do no less than try to make his daughter a Queen.

I fine appendix to second terpression.

As a poet, he followed obediently the fashion of the time. He wrote The Mulberry Garden, which falled to please Popya or to provoke a smile from the king, and The Tyreat King of Crets. He perverted Antony and Cleopatra into rime, and permits the Partition onese to meak these last words.

Good am bite deep and deadly is my breast,
And when me endsten and everaal rest. [Site dies.

He translated Vergil's Fourth Georgie as well as the Edogues, and composed a poem on matrimony called The Happy Pair which was long ago forgotten. Such reputation as he has guarded depends wholly upon his songs. What Burnet said of him might he applied to them with equal truth he had a sudden and copious wit, but it was not so correct as lord Dorset a nor so aparkling as lord Rochesters. He had far less faculty than either Rochester or Dorset of castigating his killy written lines. He was content with the common images of his day with the fancy of Gradus ad Parnassum. The maids and shepherds of his sonms like their balmy case on flowery carpets under the sun's genial ray. Their only weapons are darts and flames. In the combination of these jejune words there can be no feeling and no surreise. But Sedley had his happy moments in which he discarded the poor artifices of his muse, and wrote like a free and untrammelled poet. Phyllis is my only Joy apart from its metrical incensity has a lyrical sincority which has kent it fresh unto this day. Written to be snag, it is the work not of a for but of a poet. A near rival is Not Cella that I juster am. memorable for its epigrammatic conclusion,

When Change limit can give no muca, The case to be true.

When he condescends to lyrical patriotism, Sedley is seen at his worst. Not even his hatred of James II can pulliste such degree las Beheld the happy day ageln, Bittinguish d by the foy is every face; This day great Williams life began feed of one was and genrikes of our peace. For the rest, Rochester's criticism of Sodley is not without truth. He praised the gentle Art,

That can with a resistless Power impart. The loosest wishes to the chastest Heart.

Sedley's early ambition could not be more justly or delicately aximomed.

The reputation of Charles Seckville, Lord Buckhurst and then earl of Dorect, is a puzzle of literary history. An age layth of panegyric exhausted in his praise all its powers of flattery. In no other poet will you find so vast a disproportion between his works and the cologies they eroked. Some specimens of Dryden s adulation have already been quoted. And Dryden did not stand alone. Prior was his friendly rival in exaggeration.

"The manner in which he wrote, said he of Bockburst, "will hardly ever be equalist. Every one of his pieces is an ingret of gold, intrinsically and solicity rainable; such as wrought or heaten thinner would shine three a whole book of any asthor?

For every virtue of his Irlend's writings Prior found a happy image. There is a lustre in his verses, he wrote, 'like that of the sun in Chaude Lorraines landskips it looks natural, and is inhultable. And when we turn from the encomisate to the poet a own works, we find them to be no more than what Johnson called them, 'the effusions of a man of wit, gay vigorous, and airy Buckhurst was, above all, a satirist. He had the mordant humour, the keen eye, the perfect concision of phrase, essential to one who lashes the follies of his ago. He knew not how to spare the objects of his contempt. He left upon his enomies not the ficker of iroup, but the indelible mark of his scorn. Rochester, in a line of praise, not of ill nature, as Dryden took it, called him the best good man with the worst natured himse, a line which buckhursts addresses To Hr Edward Hessard seem to justify of their skill and energy there can be no doubt. Their victim, assuredly found them deficient in good tasts. The gentleman, says Prior 'had always so much the botter of the satirist, that the persons toeched did not know where to fix their reseminents, and were forced to appear rather ashumed than anary. It was when he read Buckhurst a ferocloss lines upon his plays.

The best known of all his works is the celebrated song. To all you Lades some at Land, a true belied in form and rhythm, touched in every line with the inborn wit and sentiment of its author who sees the see with the eye of a landsman and courtler, more anger than shame, I imagine, that attacked Edward Howard.

and who sends his tears a speedier way than the post "Toe tide shall bring them twice a day Tradition has permanded the world to believe that they were 'written at sea, in the first Dutch war 1666, the night before an engagement. As Johnson says, seldom any spiendid story is wholly true, and this spiendid story must be abandoned. The hereditary intelligence of the earl of Orrery made Johnson ampledons, and today we have some intelligence even than lord Orrers.

By cosch to my Lord Brunker's, wrote Pepps on 2 January 1905, 'by appointment, in the Plazza in Corest-Guarding; where I occasioned much mirth with a bullet I brought with me, made from the seamen at sea to their ladder in two

Though Pepys says that Sir W Pen, Sir G. Ascess and Sir J. Lawson 'made them, it is crident that it is Buckhurst' 'ballet that is in his mind, and as Pepys knew it aix menths before the battle, clearly Backhurst did not write it at see, with the expectation of an engagement upon him. The time and place of its writing, how over do not lessen the admirable quality of the balled, which keeps its place in our anthologies by its own shining merits.

Nevertheless, not his ballad, not his satires, not his songs, quick as they are with epigram and wit, justify the praises which have been generously bestowed upon their author. It may be that we have but a fragment of his work that, as Prior suggests. he cared not what became of his verses when the writing of them had amused his leisure. Many of his happlest efforts may have been preserved only by memory like the savines of the ancient Draids. If that he so, they have perished as utterly as the Druids and their wisdom. The mere remour of them cannot affect our indement, and we are driven to conclude that it was Buckharat the man, not Buckhurst the poet, who won the universal esteem, The follies of his youth were easily forgiven, or rather, the excel leners of his maturer years showed the brighter with his fallies for a background. His character was as amiable as his pen was acrid. Rochester, never lavish of compliments, paid him the highest that incepulty could deries. 'He did not know how it was said ha but mr Lord Dorset might do anything, yet was never to blame. His skill in diplomacy his tact in affairs, are acknowledged by all. and he was evidently one of those who, without effort, claim and keep the respect and affection of their fellows. Prior's enlogy of his virtues is as sincere as it is eloquent, and if we estimate his poetry more modestly than his contemporaries, we may still echo their praises of his character and person.

It would be difficult to find a greater contrast to Buckhurst than John Sheffield, earl of Mulgrare, and duke of Buckhurst than John Sheffield, earl of held the sympathy of his age as to preserve the reputation of poet which once was his. Not even the tongues of fletterers can defend him successfully against the assault of truth.

"He is a nobleman of learning, wrote Macky, and good natural parts, but of no principles. Theleat for the High Church, jet soldon goes to it. Yery proud, insoluti, and coretons, and takes all advantages. In paying his dobts unwilling; and is notiber exteemed, nor belored: for notwithstanding his great interest at court, it is certain be has been in either House of Parliament, or in the conducty.

The conduct of his quarrel with Rochester, and whatever else is known of him, justify this harsh opinion. As a writer of verses, he is finent and undistinguished. His Temple of Death has no better claim to be remembered than his Ods on Love. In The Vanon, which was written during a voyage to Tangier, we come with surprise upon a line, odd antic shapes of wild unheard of things, which is not made up of current phrases, and echoes the true sentiment of romance. His Essay on Sature, which cost Dryden an encounter with Black Will, belies the principles which he himself has set forth the accent of the scold is heard in every line. The work by which he is best known is As Essay upon Poetry a piece of rimed criticism, then fushionable. It is neither profound nor original. Even as a chapter in the history of criticism it is not valuable, because whatever of wisdom it contains is borrowed from Bolleau. It is full of commonplaces, his own and others. 'Nature's chief masterplece, mays he, is writing well. Number and rime he finds but vulgar arts, and comployed in vain without genius, 'for that a the soul. He discourses, without Illumination, of satires, songs, odes and epics. As for dialogue, he finds that Shakespeare and Fletcher are the wonders now pays a lofty tribute to Homer- Read Homer once, and you can read no more, and in the second edition, published nine years after the first, in 1691 puts Milton on the topmost pinnacle of fame, above even Tamo and Speneer This is the highest feat of his intelligence, and he would have deserved still greater credit for it, had not Boscommon anticipated him. In general, he leans to the school of 'good sense he scoopts Dryden's definition of wit, 'exact propriety of word and thought, and would judge poetry by a rigid standard of life. In condemning such nameous songs as the late Convert made, he volded his spleen against his old enemy Rochester, and suggested his dislike of the sheer wit of restoration comedy. His condemnation imprired

Robert Wolseley in his preface to Valcatinian (1635), valuably to Atours 11 tonester to me primate to recommendation (1000), remains to defend the memory of his friend Rochester and to strike a blow for the freedom of poetry

It perse yes came into any man's Head, who pretended to be a Orlick. any Wolsely faces into any many store, who presented to be a Criticle monography of the Desayark that the WH of a Foot was to be no store, the manager of the Collect, and that when this was bad, that Recogree by the worth or an endper, and that when this was one, that mean the set (on) the memory of treating the subject has littlered been drought the subject has a littlered been drought the he so too; the manner of treating the subject has althorto been thoughs one manner of treating the subject has althorto been thoughs one manner and distract the highest, so a good one will raise and dignifie the lowest.

Poetry it may be assumed, was but an interlude in the lif of Mulgrare. Politics were always his chief employment, from or programs, rounce were savais one come conneyment, iron which he redired only while William III was on the throne. The sance no reactor out anno remain in was on the arrows and favorite of queen Anne, he held high office during her reign, opposed the dake of Mariborough, ill required the queen a amisopposed the man of management of the princes Sophia to England, and bullt the take by mixing the park, which, more than his works, keeps green his Pauce in the park, which, muce than the works, acops store manne. Westworth Dillon, carl of Roscommon, on the other hand, needled in the affairs of the court as little as he nance, nocunes in the analysi of the court as inthe as he needed its vices. Born in Ireland during the reign of practiced his vices. from in treasure coring the reign of Strafford, his kinsman, he was given the name of that states certainty and amountain no was given one mano or that single-man, who presently sent him to his own estate in lortalite to man, who presently sens and to an own catate in 1 organic to be educated. He showed an aptitude for learning, and, as his biographer says, attain d to write in Letin with classical elegance segrapher says, attain a to write in Latin with customer eigence.

When the blow fell upon Strafford, Rescommer and property trues the table feet along persons and spent the was sent to cated to complete me curcuson, and spents the Jeans of civil war in learning the life and language of foreign years to the war in reasoning one one and automorphisms of investigation of the knowledge of countries, applying numer paracticary to the anomalies or medils, which he gained in perfection. He returned to England at the restoration, a scholar an honost man, and something of a at the franciscon, a science an induce man, and scinering of a prig. He had but one vice, the manufable vice of gambling, with prig. 110 may our care rice, one unaminates rice or gamoning, rice which he diminished his resources, and which coce, in Doblin, which he diministry his renources, and which cooks, in resource, went near to cause his death. A friend of Dryden, he careged near to cause me occasi, a mena or organic no causaged that great man a sympathy for his favourito project, the founding tast great mans a supposing for me favourite project, the sounding of a Brillah Academy which should refine and fix the standard of our language. And the academic bent of his mind is seen in ot our magnage. And two accasemic tent of the minute a social in terms. His Essay on Translated Ferse might well have been an exercise presented to an academy of letters. It is tame frigid an exercise presented to an academy of fetters. It is tame, fright and unhapping. Johnson says be is the only correct writer of and unmaprice. Journal says no is the only correct writer or rereo before Addison, a Judgment which sets a strange meaning plon correctness. The poets to whom Roscommon own the Street debt are Horace, whom he are he has serred more than tacnty years, and Bollean, whose apologue of the quack the introduces into his poem without pertinence. The style of the

Essay never rises above a prossic commonplace. It is only by courtesy that we call such couplets as these poetry

Provabili too far, we resolutely must To the few virtues that we have be just,

ar

From bence our gen'rous Emplation came, We undertook, and we perform d the same.

The few precepts which he gives us would not prove of the smallest use to the translator. They are little else than the platitudes generally belored by moral guides. Polonius himself might have composed this specimen.

The first great work (a Task perform'd by few) Is that yourself should to yourself be true.

He was as resolute a champion of good sense as Rymer himself, and he treats Homer with the same scant courtesy which the author of A Short View meted out to Shakemeare

For who, without a qualm, bath ever look! On holy garbage, the' by Homer Cook! Whose rayling here's, and whose wounded gods Make some suspect, He spores as well as node.

In the controversy between morality and art, he is strongly ranged on the side of morality Want of decency is want of sense, says he in a line that Mulgrave pilfered. He shines most brilliantly in aphorisms, but he cannot sustain his wisdom and what most surprises us in An Essay on Translated Verse is its reception. In Granville s eyes, he, with Mulgrave s sid, had enthrely eclipsed 'the Stagyrite and Horaca. Henceforth, said this too flattering critic, we need no foreign guide. But let it not be forgotten that Roscommon, before Mulgrave, discerned the genius of Milton and the splendour of blank verse. His theory was better than his precept. In his version of Are Poetica, he proved that, however deep might be his admiration of Milton, he could not emulate the noble dignity of his style. Nevertheless, the merit of one who in 1684, dured to write blank verse, is not that he uses it well, but that he uses it at all. Perturbed by the religious strife which followed James II s accession to the throne, Rescommon took the prudent resolution, mays his biographer, to pass the remainder of his life at Home, telling his friends it would be better to sit next to the chimney when the chamber smok'd. He did not effect his purpose. Overtaken by the goat, he died suddenly, reciting as he died two lines of his own

> My God, my father and my friend, Do not formin me at my End.

OHAPTER IX

THE PROSODY OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

In the last summary of procedle progress given in this work! we saw how with Spenser something like a new era of English so say two must opened sometimes the a ton on a signification was reached how that verification was again adjusted to the demands at once of metrical form and of the car by Spensor himself, and by his contemporaries, poetic diction of the best sort was once more constructed and how in short something like the Chaucerian position was once more stialned, bet with the metrical forms immensely varied, and with these to a condition of the language which has proved relatively permanent.

Spenser died in the peculitimate year of the sixteenth century Dividen in the last year of the seventeenth, and the period between the two deaths aitheased jarke and quilific basedge backers not received by the many term or me so immediately any me health received the production of the tup and ucature waterment says and dominic procedure progress not always in the limited and flattering acceptation of the word, but always in the time historical sense. Many of the examples and ordences of this—the dramatic blank rense of Shakespeare and his cider and Journey craft-fellows the remarkable array of later Elizabethan, Jacobean and Caroline lyric the practical creation of non-dramatic blank verse by Million the rival forms of stopped and overflowing couplet—have been separately conor suppose and orecoming conjugations over separation over sidered under the heads of the greater and leaser poets who source under the masses of the forester and descriptions will only be exemplined them to the extent necessary for a general view of the whole tendencies and results of the procedic period. But an the whole tendencies and results or the prosons points. This and alternpt will be made to map this out clearly for historically if we consider there is hardly a more important field of English remification in existence.

The point to start with, and to keep in mind as steadily as numerous values and to drag English proceed out of its fifteenth century Shough of Despond—the effort begun by Wratt and Surrey continued by Sactrillo and his contemporaries and and correst examined by cace, one and the contemporaries and completed by Spenser—resulted, almost inoritably in somewhat too great insistence on strict and nearly syllable regularity of motre. The elasticity and variety of English verse which had been the most precious heritage from the union of Teutonic and Romance qualities had been a little lost sight of, even to the extent of the strange delusion—formulated as theory by Gascoigne in the face of facts, and evidently entertained by much greater and later poets in practice—that English possessed a foot of two syllables, lambically arranged, and that foot only

Had this delusion not been counterworked, the loss would have been immense but, fortunately, the counterworking went on in two—in fact in three—important directions. In the first place, the abundant composition of sorgs for music necessitated now the admixture, now the constant observance, of 'triple time. In the second, metrical composition in this triple time, with no idea of music, was popular and, though not much affected by the greater poets, it was sporadically cultivated by the lesser, from Tomer conwards. But the great instrument, pattern and storehouse (to regard it from different points of view) in the recovery—alowly though this recovery was effected—was blank verns.

It is one of the paradoxes frequent in prosodic as in other history that this verse, in its origin and for some considerable time, might seem to have been chosen as the very sanctum of the foot of two syllables only. In Surrey you will not find a trisyllable foot except, and then rarely by giving value to a syllable (such as one or other of those in splirit') which was probably if not certainly meant by the poet to be slarred—though it may improve the verse to unsiler it. So, in the rare fragments (such as Gascoigne a Bicele Glas) of other non-dramatic sixteenth century work, and so, almost more, when the drams selred on blank verse, or blank verse on the drams. The tramp of Gorboduc is as unbroken as the ticking of a clock, as the rub-dub—not yet rub-a-dub—of the dram to which it was early compared.

But it was impossible for a true dramatist who was also a true poet to remain content with the single-moulded, middle-paused, strictly lamble 'decargillatom. Although this forms the staple verse of Peele and Greene and Marlowe, occasional escapes of passion break through the restraints in all directions, though the riviyllable foot is still very uncommon with them. But Shakespeare, in a manner dealt with more in detail in the proper place, gradually dispusses with all restraints not absolutely necessary to the retention of the general rhythm of the line. Only peritage, by reading successively—with attention to the acansion—say, a passage of

Gorbodic and one of the famous Hamilet sollloquies and by corrorates and one or the same account sometimes and of following up this pair with another—say one of Turberville a poons tometing up tout pair with another—say one or intrearner powers and a song from Mach Ado about Nothing As You Like It, or and a sough from section and moves from any one for the first formation and anyone who has not deliberately studied present. approciate the recovery of liberty in its process and in its fuldiment approxime the receivery or meany or the provide and the second any real irregularity—lines of intended account into the found and test intercountry in account or foot dirigion --whicherer arrangement may be preferred. The blank orrange will sometimes extend itself to alexandrines, perhaps, I rene will sometimes careful tises to account the service of the cases, to fourteeners, and sometimes contract itself to a rew cases, so rountedcare, and sometimes contract the fragments (i.e. lesser multiples of the unit than fire), which may regucing (i.e. seems multiples of the unit than ure), which may seem and with half as well as whose, feet. The lyrics may generally one with their as well as another foot the types multiples. But these multiples, in the lyric case, will be adjusted to a definite stame. namples, in the type case, the individual correspondent lines, symptoms and in our cases, no murrouse correspondent mes, though they may present syllable difference, will be found to be causing they may proceed a summer unterested, will no round on no cascultally equivalent—triayllabid, occasionally monosyllabid, feet (or accent groups) being substituted for dissyllabie!

The sevent opening lines of Orrische will do perfectly well, with the observation The asked opening lines of Gordons will do perfectly wall, with the observation that the rime of ablance and blance is a more accelerate, though rather on historical contractions and the contraction of t that the rime of shares and blance is a more academi, though rather an internal ing one, so thought that is was still difficult to avoid dropping too. this evanues The adjust night | that brings | the quijet passe, know bein to the harm of I the meet the darles it

aton panytos expresso os tom unetry cay Prolongs | my escaled thoughts | and makes | me blame

Principle | my entries serventus | size measure | m The abov | Aurers | that so | for love | or shares The new | Amery | tast to | for sever or aname Deth long | delay | to above | her bland/mg from

And may | the day | renews | my grief fat paint.

And now | the say | receive | my grisely as prosect | Manager of the damplished and damplished only while there is hardly one or manager of the damplished only while there is hardly one or manager of the damplished only of the da Men, every tool is emptione and shey likes only; while there is harmly are even the of, which is not, describing to ordinary Karlos proceedation, a

After or This o, where is not securing to criminy faights presentation, a pure limb. And every five has fig. 83.1 few only of such has a thirt an elevation of such has a thirt an elevation. Pers inch. And every the has 0 6, and five only of such first shifted an eleventh shifts, and ever without a present corresp, though there may be no step as pure. syllable, and even without a proceeds overran, though there may be no step in personal feating, and even a commercion in some, as blanc, and shame, with the next work of the contract to the tion, and even a commercion in sums, at blane and shame, with the ferri vern.

May take a Healer place, observing that successful and the libes, thereby the successful and the libes, thereby the libes, thereby the libes, thereby the libes, thereby the libes, the l

Here this a Mentily pass, elementary that rearrangement of the lines, though its consecution possible will not affect the department. For you will serve yet these had not been been been present that the present the present that the present that the present the present that the present that the present that the present the present that the present that the present the present that the present the present the present the present the present the p some case possible, with not asked the argument. For you will notice for these most describations. Realther will allow some of, or institutions on, stay being the results of the stay of stati decaylishese. Seather will subvision et, or itsulisson on, iiir pap in orman difference, for these is nothing in the Oorbodan passage like gen red or ign brank What He cale | to him | or he | to He cale P

That he | should weep | for her? | What should | he do. Had he | the mejure and | the ear | for passion that and her smallers and plane and plane purelines. That I | here | He | would drawn | the stage | with sear.

And cleave | the graphed to | with best of speech Make med | the guilly and | appal | the free-Conferred | the |g|abeled and | anger | indeed

The velty to making | of sym | and once

Tel 1 |
And 40 forth. Here, you have a mode of precedent as different as possible. Even I aspect to the contract of the contra and so forth. Here, you have a mode of preceders as deletions as percelled. Even if any, one objects to the abstraction in What's Hanche, he will have to allow preferables. This instinctive carrying out, however, of the principles which have been shown in previous chapters as at work since the thirteenth century, at least, was not thoroughly understood by any poet except Shakespeure. His contemporaries and successors in lytic, with a few exceptions, though they fully comprehend line variety in length and the sanna symphony produced thereby, did not renture on any large proportion of equivalence in individual feet. And there was not any harm in this, for the construction of their stances, with alternation of long and short lines, was so intrinsic and varied that it almost produced the effect of foot-substitution. But, in blank verse, the result of insufficient understanding was more disastroms. They saw the

to the extravegant extent of three syllables; seen if, as pointed out above, be desired that steepfalable feet -coural new -counts not, preferring at high front or one the steep of the result of the steep of the s

How to Irde. This pleas of Turberville

The green | that you | did wish | me wear Age for | your love and on | my belos | a known | to bear

Not to I remove— Wes order you for here I in mind Whom Onlyse hath I my turn I continued is posity excepts; but, if its grammer is rather positedly free, its metre is an procedieally strict and licited as possible. Ones more, nothing but discyllable fact and, once more, all those feet evidently intended for lambs—any doubt about deptor and but to being removed by comparison with the other charges. Compary Addi-

Where ithe ; bee | make i there | make I In | a | seveleth's | hell | I | He There | I | seems | when | Ourla | do cry On | the | her's | heat | do | I | thy Afther numbers marsh-

Marithy | marithy ; shall | I live | now Unider the | blos | som that | hance | on the | boat

Here, there are two possible ways of manaton indicated by the structure and detail then respectively—the one proposenting inside-appearite well superior, the electric process describe, but both the from the strikely and direct sense and surfaces in sensingly servangualities [lines:

Who noth | smb| then sken

And loves | to He | i' she see with anapeast substituted in one place.

It is only assessmy to add that an objection : different trace, is quite bodds the mark. The is reggetting precedie arrangements; but the differ remains. 226 The Prosody of the Seventeenth Century writing everywhere on the wall, 'Be bold! : they omitted to notice the single warning. Be not too bold!

The first excess of audacity was in the direction of the redundant syllable. This, the occasional virtue of which had been understood even by the Marlove group, and was perfectly utilised by Shakespeare, was carried, even by him, in his latest plays, dangerously near though never quite over the limit. Whether the similar exaggeration by Beaumont and Flotcher was original or imitated—whether it preceded or followed Cymbelius, The Winter's Tale and The Tempest—is a controversial point, and, therefore, not to be treated at length or positively pronounced on as matter of fact here. The opinion of the present writer is in favour of imitation and following on the part of the twins. But the added exaggeration of redundance, though it pleases different people differently when largely used, onn hardly be regarded as inconsistent with the retention of a sound standard of blank verse in at least the dramatic variety. It is otherwise with careless and exaggerated handling of the other means of varying the measure-alteration of line length, shift or neglect of pense and substitution of syllable groups. By nel-lecting to keep the normal standard at least present in the background, so far as these alterations are concerned, blank verse, already deprived of the guard of rime, simply tumbles to pieces. It actually does so in the work of D'Avenant, of Suckling and of not a few lesser men. in the last fifteen or twenty years before the closing of the theatres. No wonder that, after the restoration, we find it for a time losing hold of the drama itself and stigmatized as too mean for a copy of verses outside drama. The real wonder is at the magnificent audacity of Milton in experimently with it for dramatic or semidramatic purposes so early as the date of Cosuss (actually after D Avenant's Alborine, if before Suckling a Aglaura) and in choosing it (exactly how much later is unknown) for the vehicle of Paraduse Lost. But this is to anticipate. There is much to be said of early seventeenth century prosody before Millton and in the days when he was writing but little verse. Especially we have to deal with the resurgence and (after some vicinitudes) establishment of the decayilable couplet.

This couplet, it has been said, had been comparatively little practised in the fifteenth and the greater part of the sixteenth century. Except Durbar or whoerer was the actual author of The Freurs of Bernik, no one had got a roal grip of it before Spenser in Mother Hubbert's Tale. But Drayton gractised it early in a form like Chancers own, neither definitely 'stopped early in a form mac consumer a own, includer definitely enjambed and a phrase of his in proce, the nor definitely enjamined and a pursue of the general [twin] or gentined (as he elsewhere calls 227 attraction of the general leading of grammon (as no ensurance texts), combines with Jonson s exaliation of it (transmitted to us by its commonds with Johnson a example of it (transmitted to us by Drummond) as an important tell tale. The effect of the closing Drummon) as an important ten take. And check of the country couplets of Fairfax's Taxo is also attested in proce by Dryden on confuces or Fairlax a 2 case of all a substitution in process by representation of Weller Bot, earlier than Fairlax, Marlowe, the circumstrated or names that carner man ranges, ananous, in Hero and Leander had set the example, in extraordinarily in itero unu seusuer ma aco uno casumpo, in casumous, attractive form and matter of the overlapped kind and, on the attractive form and matter of the overlapped and and, on the whole, this was preferred in the first half of the century. The whole, this was preserved in the first quarter were Browne, Wither enter percentocas us se us uso usas quarter were oromos, vituer and, perhaps, the collematic Chelkhill in the second, Sinkerley Marmion and William Chamberlayne

This variety has many attractions, evident even in these early and raties; one many scenecious, evacent even in these carry examples, and fully developed later by Keats and William Morris examples, and many derempess man by account and the subject goes, its superiority for marratire hardly. to me as the suppose good, he supersons not married the full liberty of prose in regard to the shortening and lengthening of his morely of lease in telestic to the adjustment in convenient burgraphs. He need neither 'pad in order to aprend the sense into a conject nor break the sense up in order not to exceed the two lines. His rime not intrusire or insistent it neither touses nor interrupts on the other hand, the form provides him with all the additional on the other mann, the form province and what an the authorization of poetry thythm, time itself as an agreeable acencoments or poetry rayman, time usen as an agreence accompaniment, the advantage of a more coloured and abundant companients, the auranause of a more consumer and auranaused diction, the added ornament of simile and other poetic figure.

mon, the amost ormanism of sinus and other poeus ngure.

Unfortunately as in the case of the freer blank verse, these Vinorementary as in the case of the free transfer and great dangers, very anyaninges minure great tempinations and gives unaugers, of which some foller account will be found in the chapter on the or which some name accounts was no round in the compact on the tamp Carnume poets the avenue of research of semicaco construction leads to confused and inconsecutive writing which, in the furn, does almost more harm to the story than the power of te turn, uses summer more used to me such man one hower of varying sentence sengen and or Journing sentences together toos good. But this is not all the verse itself suffers, as verse. The good, the time is not as the danger of excessive prominence, facult that rine, it is exapted too danger of excessive prominence, incurs time of being simply merged in the flow of overlapping lines. This or nems that it also loses the power of foldling its function as means that it also ruses the power of stamming its immediate and that the individual line becomes flaccid and inno-reaser and that any many about the because and and in fact, a general alorenlineas comes over it imperies in tests. In last, a governa anyeomous comes over it and, whether by accident or definite cameation, no chapter of on, vecurer or actions or unimite camation, no enapter or markable than this for ugly contractions

228 The Prosody of the Seventeenth Century

not to be saved by the most liberal allowance of trisyllable foot, for libertine accommation and for other lackes of the kind

On the other hand the stopped form which had existed separately in Chancer himself which was not unfrequent in sopurately in Commercer ministers which when the octave became popular becomes and arrayment and within when the overall presented a combination, almost obtained itself as a constant code, presented a combination, beyond all question unrivalled in English poetry of strength, popular quenous surriculos in cagana poorej or accurga, neathers and regular music. The encombastic exemplification of Str John Beamont; above us, with perfect clearness and in or not some persons arrows us, when persons commons and in effective terms, what its admirers and practitioners found and enourse terms, what its aumirers and practitudes found and liked in it. The sweetness of the stants, itself regular enough bot long drawn out, had palled on them the new overlapped our outs out, but feation on them too now oversapped paragraphs were not regular and were more long drawn out still mails a third variety of couplet, which the antifate and, especially Donne were attempting a revolted them, not without reason, by its roughness. It may perhaps, be questioned whether those to whom options and munitarizable regularity is the cylef chaim of some tonguiness. It was because to a discount amount around the contract of the cylef chaim of some tonguiness. oursons and differentiation of regularity is one coner charm of rense that restrained to the full understanding of it but it is certain that, for a very large number of persons, perhaps even a considerable for a very large number of persons, persons over a community regularity does provide this charm. They found it in the stopped decay hable couplet, combined with the years' charm of stopped decay/habte couplet, combined with the share charm of exact and emphasic rimes, as well as with that which seems also, to hare appealed very strongly to popular favour) of limitation of some to a manageable modicum of metre.

The history of this battle of the couplets, as it has been tormed, turns on the names and work of the poets mentioned and of others. It must not be supposed—and indeed, will hardly and or others. It must live to supposed—air, mostly will incruly be supposed by any one convergent with literary history—that any one of them are a bostita and excitate backetanger of any one or menu was a passisto and executive propagamess or either kind. Waller who obtained his traditional title reformer of our numbers from his practice in the stopped kind, wrote or our numbers from one processes on one scopped and, wrote one of his latest, and some of his best, work in the other some on the mices, and some or the terms, work at the other forms too, affected both though there is no doubt that his

The raish of the Mass econicis in rayme the states or the state of the Our Sexon spariness park beengar grass In chains of words for the anding place, Which here impression in the mind as well

This passes, which is much began events in the terms addressed to that James conserming the true form of English postry Securing the tree term of Captin perty.

The theory remetines maintained that their respinant, especially in Donne' even 3 The freety remetizary maintained that the programs, appeally in Donas' even case, was a deliberate troub from Spensming manchesses, if not a deliberate attempt Davidets, with its deliberate introduction of the alexandrine to vary, weight and extend the stopped form, was of great moment. On the other hand, as has been observed, Chamberlayne, the author of Pharomnich, the longest and the best of the enjambed couplet poems, employs the stopped form in his England's Jubis. But, little by little, this form triumphed and its superior adaptation to the types of poetry most popular after the restoration—satire, didactics, ephtles and the like—must have won the day for it, even if the faults of its rival' had been loss gross. Nothing can be wisely regretted which gave us first Dryden and then Pope. But, even if these great masters had not found in the stopped couplet a metre exactly suited to their respective powers, its regulative quality—the way in which it once more drove degreed out of English verse—would amply validate its claim to respect.

In miscellaneous metric, the performance of the first third of the century is, also, very poteworthy though in no single respect of equal importance to that of the progress of blank verse and the rivalry of the two couplets. Among suddens experiments in lyric, a peculiar form or phase of the old ballad or common measure (8686 ab ab) was developed by Jonson, Donne and others, the most famous example of which is Jonson's cento from the Greek of Philostratus. Drink to me only with thine eves. In this by indictions fingering of the yowel sounds, and of the run of the metre. a cadence arises which is almost peculiar to the period and which is of extraordinary beauty. By Jonson, again, and by his disciples Herbert and Sandys (the latter important, also, in the decasyllable couplet), the peculiar inclusive arrangement of rime in floor measure (8888 abba) which is now associated (probably for all time) with Tennyson a adoption of it in In Memoriam, was hit upon, though not largely used or thoroughly perfected. And the same lyrical genius which, in Jonson, was happily united to other gifts and characteristics not often found in its comment enabled him to practise what are sometimes called epode arrangements alternations of shorter and longer lines in couplet -with singular felicity Nor would it be possible to summarise in any general terms of value the remarkable combinations of lines. from the monogribable to the fourteener with which his contemporaries and successors experimented, from Campion to Herrick in point of time, and from billion to John Hall in point of importапсе.

This admirable practice in lyric was itself of great value in that regulative process which has been pointed out as one of the chief duties incumbent on proceedy during the century for counter balancing the tendency of blank verse in its decadence and that of the enjambed couplet. But one of the names mentioned at the the capaniness couples. Due too or one mains missioned as one close of the last paragraph indicates by itself at once this process toos or the sate paragraph management by ment as ware time process of regularization and one of sanctioning and arranging liberty. The progress of Allton's metrical development and practice, and the Pay in which he ranks with Chancer Spensor and Shakespeare as one of the four order billians of English is oscody have poen exhibited as in amount of the point of the four order order or the four order of the four order orde one of the chapter specially devoted to him! It may however be in the conjust specially derived to man the many news of the surda med above, as the ordering of freedom. His verse paragraphs, the use of the as any ornorms or recommendation received paragraphs, are use or use which helps powerfully to constitute them, the majorite pages which neeps poweriumly to constitute them, the majorato at his diction to his metre, his cuming management anapuatou or me unever or me more or me comming management of word sound and word colour—all those things must fill a creat place in the estimate of him as poet and propodist. In from peace in one communic or man as pure and processing. In the Scheral history of the latter subject, they become not too general menory or two natures angles, two tensions our insignificant but of minor importance, compared with the implic nauguneaus out or inner imperature, computer who are manuscribed frochaid equivalence of his octoryliable complete in LAllegro and trocases equivasence or an octouplastic complete or a machine in Paragraph, Arcades and Comma, and of still loss importance as a compared with the so-called irregularity (call it what when compared with the surface integrating (can is wise, blank verse of Paradise Loss. The first of these impires Dier in the enry eighteenth century and Blake in the later with in the carry equipment contact) and have in the later with the provident times mentures amost museumously amusaure to and patrations some the second, though it produces at least up to Cowper's latest work, no section, usedily beautiful as imitation, works in a fashion less nounce cleans occurred as measured, we as a manufacture season dolightful, perhaps, but more beneficial still. For these Miltonio configure, permise, our more renounced and. For some amount amount of them trochaic and anapacetic substitution, elision, about trees trees and an anaparette and another trees and a street or once more, what you will-draint, in any case, on receiving attention. They will Jou was many in any case, on receiving ancience. Anny will not let you alone and you cannot let them alone. It is admitted, not set you asked and you cannot set men aloos. It is aumitted, with mimportant exceptions, throughout the eighteenth century that Millon is a very great poet and yet he is constantly out of than auton is a very seems poet, and yes no a commany one or apparent harmony at least with the accepted rules of poetry. Frem apparent naturally as teast with two accepted rules on poorly form.

² fion, again, vol. vol. stan, sv

230 The Prosody of the Seventeenth Century

If you edit or alter him out of his own character as did Bentley. and Pemberton if you elide him into exceptions like most people of that time if you scold him for ilcontions conduct like in this time is Jun saunt and for accurate connect man beautiful and Vicesimus knox and even Johnson, the shameless stones of his actual verse architecture soursous un susuances accous un mo accuma verso arconoccuro remain unalfored, mataire, respiendent. At any moment, some one may come who will read their lesson aright at all moments, they keep that lesson ready Unless you cut Shakespeare and Million out of the book of English literature, the secret of English prosody remains and will remain open.

With one important development of proceedy during his time, however Milton had little to do though the experiments of Samson show that he may have thought of it latterly! This was the employment of the anapacet—not in occasional substitu tion for the famb, but as the principal base-foot of metre. It has been pointed out repeatedly that such use, between the time of doggerel and the mid-seventeenth century is rure in literature though anthentically established by Tusser, Humfrey Gifford, Campion and others. But folk-song kept it and, in such pieces as Alary Ambres, which, perhaps, is as early as 1884, there is no mistake about it. Yet literary poets are still shy of it, and it is curious how rare it is in the work of a man like Herrick, which would seem importaively to demand it, and which actually gets a pseudo-triayllable effect out of strictly disayllable bases. In spite of the pressing invitation of music, closely connected as it is with or the lyric of this period, there hangs about the triple time a sug too tyric or this period, there makes about the tripse time a ong gostion of frivolity and rulgarity which is formulated preceptively at the beginning of the next century by Byzake. Long before that, been reached, Cleireland in his Mark Antony and Square-Cap Waller in his Saraband—both popular and widely road versifiers had employed it. But Cleiveland a handling is very uncertain and this uncertainty as to whether the authors meant lamble and trochale morement with trisyllable substitution, or a mainly triaylable measure with similarly occasional dissyllable equivalence, porsists as late as some examples of Dryden.

This last named poet, however brought his great metrical atill, and his almost unchallenged authority to the support of acut, and the acute of the in many songs and lytic scattered about his plays, and in others not attached to any drama, but Published in his Hiscollanies. The other numerous collections of the middle and late seventeenth and the early eighteenth centuries, from the Husaries Delictae of Memor [Minnes] and is possible, theoryk, in the insmediate context, not necessary Dennik | with ideal stry drank | with when

The term anapsas is used because the pressure writer is continued that almost all makely triey takes measures in English rations thereafters to that foot. But it is at meany convenies measures in congium ratios tongenerum is treat time. One is a probable that in meany if not more, mean, and seriain that in some, the writers

232 The Protody of the Seventeenth Century

Smith to the Pills to Purps Melancholy of Tom D'Urley testify at mee to the popularity of the movement and to the increasing akill of poets in it. The form which it most ordinarily taken is the same to proce in the line to the minute of the complete and wall files. traied by Mary Ambree likelf. Some years before the close of the sormicenth contary this form was taken up and perfected by a poet who could not be pool pooled as unlettered, Matthew Prior It continued, indeed, for the best part of the eighteenth contary to be regarded as a light measure, in more than the character of its morement in fact, the approach to more serious these was made earlier by the three-than by the four-footed variety But the point of importance is the making good of a place of ans any points or importance is no making some or a peace or randage and security for a metre very different in character from that which was to hold the actual domination of English procedy for more than a hundred years.

nor more uses a numerou years.

Another and somewhat similar piace of arms was established somewhat corlier in the form of the octoryllable couplet, by Botler and further fortified, not merely by Prior himself, but by Swift, who was not unimportant likewise, in regard to the mapacet This form was by no means the same as the lillionic and was also, for a rong time, more or rese minimized with section and order seem sections reme. It did not, as a rule, permit itself to full in a servous toron, as use the person there is the use of the person to the use of the person of the use of the us of the other kind and so it commended itself to the strong and or the other and, and so is commensed then to the entire and growing contemporary love for order. Butler marked its time number growing contemporary to remove the around measure and the same time, the colouries floring which syllable exactitude had too often ture, one constrains muchany reacts agree on caracteristic state on the first of the first one of the first narried or anowou (for measure, in cover). Due no noncommute units self for exactly do within the line by large extension at the end into sett for exactitings within the line by large extension at the end into double and even triple rime and his manipolation of the rime securally eren without this extension, was marked by a pungency Studenty of the windows and carecaster, was marked by a pungency which, of itself, would have given character to the versa. Prior watch, to liketh, would take given character to the versal sinter and Swift when he did not aim at special burlesque effect (as of course, Butler had almost always done), reduced what has been colled the acrobation of the measure, but made it into something much more than an cary fingle —a narratire and constonal medium of enturposed capacity providing an invaluable case. tent, if not a definite correction, to the larger couplet. But the way in which the course of events and the genius of Dut me way in which the course of crems and the femins of Julen settled the succession of the state of prosody for some Just scarce the seasons of the couplet itself is the nt of importance for the rest of this chapter And, in order to exhibit it to advantage, a short recapitulation of the actual state itself, at about the year 1600, should be given.

The State of English Prosody about 1660 233

By this time-as the reader of these chapters will have per celved if he has taken the trouble to read them consecutivelyalmost the whole province of English procedy had been consciously or preparedonsly explored though no ordrance man of it had been even attempted, and very large districts had not been brought under regular cultivation. Its life, to change the metaphor had nessed from the stage of infancy in the twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth centuries to an almost premature state of accomplished growth at the close of the last named, but had gone through a serious fit of disease in the fifteenth. It had recovered magnificently during the later sixteenth and earlier seventeenth, and, within this time. had practically though not theoretically's completed the pioneer exploration above referred to. But certain dangerous symptoms had recurred in the breakdown of blank verse, in the roughness of the estivists in the flaccidity of the heroic enlambed counlet while the great tonic work of Milton, unlike that of Chancer was not at once appreciated, though, perhaps for that very reason. it had a deeper and more lasting effect. The immense increase of range which had been given by the practice of the various stancas, of lyric, of octoryllable and decayllable, of one other curious development vet to be noticed and above all of blank verse. had seemed, sometimes, to overpower the explorers' sense of rhythm and metrical proportion-to afflict them with a sort of prosodic vertigo. Either Milton or Shakespeare would have been a hazardous specific for this, insamuch as neither and more especially not Shakespeare—used a technically rigid versification. Nothing has ever been devised-probably nothing ever could be devised—so efficacions for medical purposes in this condition of things as the stopped heroic counlet.

The development excepted above has been reserved for this place because it went on side by side with that of this couplet held, and occupied, as it were, the position of privileged ally This was the so-called Pindarie of Cowley and his followers. More or less irregular strophes of great beauty and very considerable length had been schieved by Spenzer and Ben Jonson had attempted regular strophic correspondence, as, in fact, did Cowley himself. But the Pindarie which he principally practised and personally made popular which Dryden raised to a really great poetic medium, in which country Swift made actoriously un portion are and which, in the late seventeenth and early eighteenth century burdened the English corpus poetican with masses of intolerable rene, had no regular correspondence in the inages of involvenoe rene, and no regular correspondence in see of strophe antistrophe and code it was merely a fortistons string of stances, of unequal but considerable length, individually composed of lines also medual in length, but arranged and rimed entirely at the poet's discretion. The rene was, ordinarily samble and adhered to this measure with tolerable strictness passages in triple time being only inserted in pieces (like Dryden a Alexander's Frest, but not his Asses Killigrow ode) intended for modest performance. It therefore, did not act, like the amparatic, and the octosyllable, as an exapement from the herolo in the way of equivalent mberlintion though to some extent it did so act in the less important matters of line-length parse and strictly coupled rime. importants matters or into-songlet passes and street conference on inmorement, in both regular and irregular forms—it has produced much magnificent poetry. But few of its practitioners, except Dryden, between 1650 and 1750, made of it anything but a except 1171000, octavent rows and 11000 made on it anything that are the companies exclonerations of line and rime—now hopelessly ton or returned agreementations or mine and reservoir surprisently fact, now absurdly bombastic-often, if not usually a mere meas of prose, rhythmed with the least possible effect of harmony and proce, injustice with the seast pressure cures of partners and appointed or chopped into linefuls after a fathious at little grateful spoored or enopped into interior, after a manual as nitro graceous or graceful as might be. It is, on the whole, during this period, or gracerus as magnit un. 11 is, un une whose, unimig uns person, a distinctly curious phenomenon but, in more ways than one, a mannery currons potentially only in more says seen one, and metre sure only well married in the heroic complet itself.

³ The few thereigh between the death of Spenser and that of Dryden will be dealt with at the end of this chapter

234 The Prosody of the Seventeenth Censury

tries in the nervice couples them.

To say that this couplet could not have received its actual firm criabilishment without Dryden would perhaps, to less philosophical than to say that the necessity of its establishment in its turn necessitated the arising of a poet like Divider. If Pope and he had necessulates and assume or a precision and any one is a cope and see and changed places, it is pretty cortain that the domination of the form canaged pasces, it is presty correct time time to commission or the form would have been much shorter than it actually was. For Dryden had would not a need index shortes than its accounty was for retyron must be not completed in the pure couplet and of no means rope a anacomeus to the coupler, the pure coupler and his own form of it was much affected 7 Precedent Poorly thereby as it were, couring the new relicie 7 Precedent Poolly undready at it were, greating the new reduced in to the old. He took from Fairfax and Waller the sententions amp of the stopped measure he took from Cowley the slex amp or the suppose message no tous from cowey the saca drine licence with its powers of amplification and variation be unn necuco wim in powers or ampairation and variation were before the perfect with its illar reinforcement. He carly adopted the use of the same word, emphatically repeated in different places of consecutive or neighbouring lines so as to give relief to the unvarying smoothness and the clockwork balance of the strict Wallerian type. Above all after he wrote his first batch of complet poems near the time of the restoration itself, and before he wrote his great satiric and didactic pieces in the same measure twenty years later he had an enormous amount of practice in it through his heroic plays. The actual poetic value of them does not here matter at all. A man of Dryden's metrical gift could not have written even ten or twenty thousand nonsense verses without becoming a thorough master of the metrical capacities of his instrument. But, as a matter of fact, little as the couplet may be suited to the necessities of the stage, those necessities themselves force it to display capacities which it would not otherwise abow People may laugh at (without, as a rule, reading) The Indian Queen and Tyrannie Love, The Conquest of Granada and Aureng-Lebe. But it is as certain as any such thing can be that, without his practice in these plays, Dryden s counlet would never have attained the astonishing and unique combination of ease and force, of regularity and variety, which it displays in Absolom and Achitophel and Mao Flecknos, in Religio Laici and The Hind and the Panther Nor was it merely in the couplet itself that Dryden maintained that precessing and unstereotyped variety of practice, which made his last examples of this particular metre in the Fables perhaps the capital instances of their particular kind. He took good care never to allow himself the sterfliging indulgence of the single string. Reference has been made to the excellence of his smaller lyrics (far too often not so much undervalued as ignored) and of his larger, the stately dignity of his decasyllabic quatrains in Annus Harabilus, though somewhat stiffer than it would have been if written at a later date, is admirable in itself he shows himself, rarely as he tried them, a master of easy octosyllables and his blank verse, when he returned to it in All For Lore, is of really splendid kind prosodically and has seemed to some almost the last English example of the form (except certain still more splendid but much rarer and briefer flashes of Lee) which really unites poetical and dramatic quality

All this practice, with its variety and its excellence, is reflected in, and, probably to no small extent contributed to, the peculiar quality of what, after all, is Dryden's main poetlo instrument—the complet. This complet is not, like Popes, bred in and in a swerenly trained and exercised to a typical but somewhat limited perfection. It is full-blooded, exuberant, multiform, showing semetimes, almost the rush of the ampacet, though it seldomperhaps never intentionally—admits the foot itself, and sometimes elmost the mass of the blank verse paragraph though its pairs or occasional triplets are usually complete in themselves. Dryden attains his effects in it not merely by the special devices already statute the cureas in is the mental of emphasized word in notou—accassoration, arpects represent on compansation was an additional place—but by an emphresent and poculiar distribution of the weight which almost self-contradictorily destints of or the weight which among the rorse. He poises and wields and nearment characteristics are voiced and process are process are process and process are process are process and process are process are process and process are process and process are process. The process are process are process are process are process are process. The process are process are process are process are process are process. The process are process are process are process and process are process are process are process. The process are process are process are process are process are process. The process are process are process are process are process a doing this, he necessarily often neglects the middle pause, and, n unificularily breaks his line into actions brought about by Pans untrapped to said in a way inde pendent of the strict metrical division. Thus, a line partly quotes is perfectly normal—fire-feeted or five-accented—to all but those who deny the possibility of length or secent to the and of while who usely use jeasurements or senger or accept to see and or, where one of the fresheld subdivision in other ways. eren uner can manage une areman aucuntanon an outer ways.

236 The Prosody of the Seventeenth Censury

To set | lie the | succession of | the state

But, in addition to this, Dryden has communicated to it a threefold rhetorico-prosodio arrangement To settle—the succession—of the state, which, as do other things like it in other lines, entirely frees the Seneral context from the objection of mechanical jointing into Seneral context from the objection of mechanical journing and merely equal lengths. He has also a great tendency to bear up mercy equations and his couplets with important wordsespecially when he uses middle pause as in They got a villain, and we lost a-fool, Or-

Had more of Hon in her than to fear

But all this variation was strictly subjected, in Dryden s case, not an time remembers are somety suggester, in anyone seems to what he and his contemporaries with almost energied up to to such are said use contemporaries and autres everyway up to the early part of the nineteenth century and not a few people the carly Part of the important century and not a rea proper since, called smoothness or sweetness—the origination of which ance cause amovaments of sections—the origination of some they were wont to attribute to Mr Waller. That is to say tool were wont to attribute to arr maner that is no say you could never mistake the distinct imble—and fire-spaced Jou count were assume the contrar minute and pro-spectal families distribution of the line. Monotony was avoided but confusion of the lass of the versification was avoided still more tenuescon or use ones on use recumentation was aroused sum more definitely and peremptorily. It is to this double avoidance that the differential of the Diridentan couplet is due and to it the astoniahing hold which that couplet, in—but not exclusively in the permutations which it underwent, maintained for nearly five generations after Dryden began, and for more than three after he had brought it to full perfection.

It was natural that the somewhat tyrannous way in which its supremacy was exercised—the way in which, as may be seen later measures of more strictly poetical quality than itself were ostra cised or pech-peched should make the revolt violent when that revolt came. It is natural that, even to the present day vindi cation of its merits should seem like treason to these measures, in the even of wellmeaning, but somewhat uncatholic, lovers of poetry itself. But no one who holds the balance true can share these feelings. The couplet of Dryden and its follower to which we have not yet come, the couplet of Pope, together with other still later varieties, blends of the two, are not the be-all and end-all of English propedy they leave out much and even forbid something that is preater than they But the varieties constitute a very great metrical group in themselves. Fresh varieties of the stopped form-not much practised in the nineteenth century or in the twentieth, as yet-have been foreshadowed by Keata in Lanua. and by Tennyson, in a brief but extraordinarily fine passage of The Vision of Sin. But, whatever has been and whatever may come, and whatever sins of omission and exclusion be on its head. it established in the English car a firm sense of rhythm that is really rhythmical, and a notion—which may easily be carried too far, but which is eminently salutary in itself—that combinations of verse and arrangement of sense should obey some common law It is no treason, it is only reason, to combine with enthusiasm for the propedy of Shakespeare and Milton and Shelley admiration for the propody of Jonson, of Pope and (above both) of Dryden.

This chapter would be incomplete without a few remarks on the preceptive presoly of the seventeenth century although, in amount of definite utterance, it is singularly meagre. Some obiter ducts of Drayton and others have been noted above. But the classical metre quarrel, which furnishes much matter for the middle and late streenth century, had died down with the duel of Campion and Daniel the serious stiention of the first two generations of the century was directed to other things than proceedy, and the revival of general criticism in the third did not take procedic form, while the very multiformity and diversity of procedic practice, during the earlier period, may have had something to do with the absence of theory. There is a very curious and to no with the absence of smooth, where is a very curious and interesting preface by an unidentified J D. (who cannot have interesting faviance up an unificely to have been John Dryden) to the posthenous Explish Paracases of Joshus Poole (1656-7). the passing some rather scute criticism on the prevailing fault outstands some range states of the interesting remarks of or its cranmon uses. Incre are, and, the interesting remains to Samuel Woodford's as to Milton's versification. Milton himself, in his accomful denunciation of rime before Paraduse Loss, has touched the subject, though he has hardly done so in the preface to Samon Agonistics. But the main interest under this particular to come a symmetry that the man meetrs much this parational boad is an interest of a somewhat Hibernian kind, for it rehong is an interest of a somewhat allocation and the to-tosammance, if not evidence, of the strongest kind that they formerly Joneon and Dryden, who were both in a way literary dictators, the one for the first, the other for the lest, third of the century were also men from when propodle discussion might naturally hare been expected, and from whom it ought to have been excepnate own expected, and from which is only to make own traces the flower of exceptional valuable. Not only were both possessed of exceptional tomany variance. Not only were noted presented of extraporation of metro, but both had a and animally varied passages command or ments out cour non a sound acquaintance, in Jonson s actions membration to criticism a sound acquaintaines, in voissus access more specially with ancient in Dryden's with modern, litera case more species argumentative feelily. Moreover, we know on their own authority that both did treat or at least intended on their own authority that what our man, or as least, interaction to treat, the subject thoroughly But, in neither case does any full to treat, the surject minungary and a more providing—though we may treatment exist, any warmen as more provising—though we make the cannot, if (as indeed, is not very commonly done) w control our guesswork by positive evidence, he at all certain what the general purport of either would have been at the general purpors of either stoud have been.

238 The Prosody of the Seventeenth Century

The facts as to Joseon are these. He glances at presedy in the facts as to someon are treed, the grances as pressedy in incompleted Expense Grammer distinguishes English from his incompleted anythin orders or configuration and transition of treatment with promise of treatment the hed of the book which heel was either never reached, or in the near or are tooks a summer near was course notes tenting of the study. In Discoveree, there is pertuned in the comming of the strong of the the or mining prosons. In the more unitsons, this process, in the main, trustworthy Conternations with Drawwood, however, the main, treatmently contributions with Disassonia monoice there are precedic teaches of great but tantalising interest. When there are presents towards of green was causemony miscres. There a man thinks Abraham France a fool for writing quantitative a mon tomas auranem risease a non no writing quantitative herameters and John Dome worthy of hanging for not keeping nextuncters and some source worthy or manging on the safet happens, accord, the opinions are noteworthy enough but, as it happens, accent, the opinion are nonewormy energy not, as it mappeds they might be connected and systematised in quite different ways.

Prosodic Sentences in Jonson and Dryden 239

Spenser a metra, it is said, did not please Jonson but there are several ways in which it may have displeased him. The central statement—most definite in one part and most ambiguous in suctice part—is that he not merely intended 'to perfect an Epic Poem all in couplets, for he decested all other rimes, but had actually written a Discourse of Poory both spaints Campion and Dealel, especially this last, where he proves couplets to be the braves not of verses especially when they are broken like harameters, and that econ-rhysics and cleans.

Now except as to the growing dislike of the stance, where we have the above mentioned corroboration of Drayton, and the preference of the couplet, where we have the corroboration of the whole history just surveyed, this gives us very little positive information. Indeed, the phrase broken like hexameters is almost hopelessly susceptible of various and even opposite interpretations. Those who like to take expanse phrases, place their own interpretations upon them and then infer and deduce away merrily may reconstruct Ben Jonson's Discourse of Poers. The present writer declines the task, though he feels tolerably certain as to the probable drift of some passages.

The situation repeats itself, with a curious general similarity, at the other end with Dryden. In his copious critical work, nessers of definite prosodic bearing are extraordinarily few, and mostly slight and vague. There is indeed one exception in the Dedication of the Aeners' This contains a discisimer of history canned by 'the want of a coccura (as he oddly calls elision). which disclaimer is extended into a valuable ceneral rule that no vowel can be cut off before another when we cannot sink the pronunciation1, some curious comparisons of English with French and Italian procedy a commendation of the occa-sional alexandrine (warranted by Joneson and Cowley) and one or two other things. But the most important sentence is, again, a 'pain of Tantalus. I have long had by me the materials of an English Procedia containing all the mechanical rules of versillostion, wherein I have treated, with some exactness of the feet the quantities and the pauses. Alas! either these materials were never worked up (though 'I have treated looks positive enough) or else both they and the working up were lost. It may, indeed be observed in passing that the absence of any remains or

¹ Rossys, vol. 15, p. 217 ed. Kec, W P

It thered to charred that lith rate is far reaching; and that, in particular it outs a lith consequence of Millionic and other properly which would discoulable pronounciation from meetinal value.

240 The Prosody of the Seventeenth Century

posthimous publication of any kind in the case of a writer so prolific and industrious as Dryden is remarkable. But, however this may be, the English Procedus, apparently

In limbs with A Discourse of Possy and in this case, as in the other we can only conjecture what the contents would have been By an odd sednence powerer, which are hopping not a comby an our sequence, source make the product over concerning to be but a few months in his grave caused mercay preparation and because a sow account in the great book descring the name of an English Procedula appeared. The work of Brahe does not belong to this chapter appearen. Into work or Disante uses not contain to one conspect but it is evidently deduced—imperfectly podantically and one. out it is evinearly according to practice of the period of Dryden him said, enough it excludes or depreciates, and sometimes explicitly scat arrays is excusives or appreciately and samouning expinents which characterise Drydens work. But its faults look forward rather than backward and therefore, we must not say any more of it for the present.

to to the process.

It is, however worth while to point out that even Dryden, it is nowever worse wante to point out tous even overoces, with his remarkable acuteness and catholicity of appreciation. would have been hard put to it to devise a Proceedia which should would make been made put to the rease of the generation before him and to equal justice to the verse of the generation before him and that of his own routh, as well as to his own, and that of his contemporaries. The changes were not only only great but too contemporaries. And conseque were not conjugate great out too gradual to be discriminatingly allowed for by mirroute and too gradual to be discriminatingly amoved for by anyone without larger assistance from what one of his own anyone without targer assessment from with with one or me own admirable phrases calls the firm perspective of the pest. That annurance pursues cause the num perspective or the past. 2 mass anistance has been utilised here as much as possible and it is anutance has occur utilised more as much as possible and it is hoped that the result may at least help some readers to do sometoped time the results may as tears may some reasons to do some-thing like the justice which even Dryden could hardly have done to the verse of the whole period covered in the present chapter

CHAPTER X

MEMOR AND LETTER WRITERS

I. EVELYS AND PERTS

Diantze are usually written for the writer a own private in formation, and their production has been common in most ages. They have sometimes been made use of as the foundation for subsequently published reminiscences, but very few have been printed as they were originally written. The two great exceptions to this general rule are the diaries of John Erelyn and Samuel Pepys, and these may be ranked as distinguished (literations of two distinct classes of diary. The one is a record of occurrences in the life of the writer and the other a relation of a mixture of incidents and confessions.

The latter must be the rarer of the two and Penysa work is sourcine in its class. Of the former class, two examples covering somewhat the same period as that occupied by Evelyn and Pepva are known. The Discreall of Thomas Rugge, which covers the years 1659 to 1679, still remains unprinted but Narchana Luttrell's Brief Historical Relation of State Affairs (1678-1714) was problished in 18571 It ends abruptly with an unfinished sentence on 1 April 1714 As Lettrell lived more than eighteen years after this date, dring on 27 June 1732, it is possible that some volumes of the diary have been lost. He was well known as a collector of books, broadsides and manuscripts but Thomas Hearne, in his diary, gives a very unflattering portrait of the man. Luttrell's diary contains passages of interest concerning Evelyn, Penys. Dryden and many of their contemporaries. These two books are of historical value, but they are largely compiled from the newsletters of the time and are not of any literary value. The diaries

¹ Latiral's original MS (in 17 who. Sw), which was bequesthed (lowests the end of the eighteenth sectory) to All Souls college, Origot, by Lettrall Wyane, is preserved in the college Ronary

of Evelyn and Pepys, besides being of great historical interest as or neuron and repres occurs some or gross misorical inferences as works

In face of the fact that both Erelyn and Pepys were men of mark, it seems strange that these valuable historical documents, although known to be in existence, were allowed to remain in manuscript until the first quarter of the nineteenth century If for one moment, we consider what the history of the rostoration at not take mountain, we consider the are many or any constant were on wount on it an we make married from times and arrives and blotted out, we shall see at once how greatly their writings have added to our knowledge of that period. It will be remembered. how Macanlay once dream that a nice of his had forged Popps a now assessment were uncount when a most or one man reason a very sea and that the nows, as well it might, plunged him into 'the greatest dismay

If was primarily due to the intelligence of William Upcott, biblio. grapher and deroted lover of autographs, that Errlyn a diary first graphers use nervices rover a subgrapher time extension users are the light. On Upcost's being employed by lady Evelyn, the owner of Wotton, to Inspect her collection of manuscripts, his owner or woman, to mapped ner concernon or manuscripts one attention was particularly attracted to the original manuscript of attention was furthermary attracted to the original manuscript on the diary. When, by his advice, its publication was decided upon, to dury there, up are survey to provide the service of the Servey and It was amongs expenses to open mes services or the ourse, and opographer William Bray as editor Bray who was an quary ann topographies is main only as cultur. Diay who was an elderly man when he undertook the task, did not do very much covery man wave we assume the book but Upcott continued his towards the measurances of the cook out of the continuous me interest in the work and was an able assistant to him. The diary and correspondence was published in 1818, and received by the and correspondence was purchased in Adds, and received by two public with great anistaction a second edition appeared in the points will grow salesmenton a second common appeared in the following year and the diary has continued to be reprinted as e standard work in a large number of different forms. The two volumes issued in 1018 centain several references to

Samuel Pelys, and these accen to have directed the practical Samed represent the most of Magdalene college, Cambridge (George attention of the somewhat injections six volumes written in Orenzuels to the sourcement in secretary six renames services as shorthand which were circledly preserved in the Peppisan library shorthater which were chremity preserved in the replyman moraly life took the opportunity of a visit by his distinguished kinsman the took are opportunity of a vant up me unanguancu amenian lord Grunillo, who, as accretary of state for foreign affairs, was form thems, which as accretary or state for society among well acquainted with accret characters, to bring the MS under wen acquainted with series characters, to owng the and make his notice. Lord Grenville, parriling over its pages, left a transnii nouce. Lord oremrine, patting over its reges, ich a titue.

Astion of a few of these, an alphabet and a list of arbitrary signs on the use of the decipherer that was to be. These aids to his for the case or the occupancer that was to on these was so one sork were handed to John Smith, then an undergraduate of 1 Terrelyne, Et. G O., Life and Letters of Lord Managing 1878, vol. 11 a. 178.

St John a college (afterwards rector of Baldock, Herta), who under took to decipher the whole. He began his labours in the spring of 1819 and completed them in April 1852, having thus worked for nearly three years, usually for twelve or fourteen hours a day This was a great and difficult undertaking, carried out with complete success. The decipherer, writing on 23 March 1858, gave the following particulars as to his work

The MS, extended to 2012 quarto pages of shorthand, which farnished extended formerle pages in lengthend and enthrened 31 different is shorthand characters, compressing 2011 words and letters, which all had to be kept continually in mind, whilst the head, the eye and hand of the decipherer were all engaged on the MS.

Smith says that the eminent shorthand writer William Brodie Gurney sawared him that neither he nor any other man would over be able to decipher it, and two other professors of the art confirmed his opinion. The shorthand used by Pepys was the system of Thomas Shelton, author of Tackypraysky 1641, although Lord Braybroots was under the impression that it resembled Richs system. This opinion put some persons on a wrong scent, and it is affirmed that two friends in America, who usually practised two modern and helefar systems, corresponded with each other in Richa which they lisd mastered out of interest in Penus.

Brelyn and Pepys were lifelong friends, and they had many business relations in connection with the navy which were carried on in a spirit of mutual esteem. There was a certain likeness between the two men in public spirit and literary tastes but there was perhaps, still more divergence in their characters, as shown by their respective diaries. Both were of gentle birth, but Evelyn belonged to the class of men of quality and was a frequenter of courts, while Pepys had to make his own way in the world by his tenacity of purpose and great abilities. Although the two diaries are closely united in popular esteem, they differ grently in the length of the periods which they cover as well as in the character of their contents. Evelyn's work practically deals with the whole of his life, having been begun at a comparatively early age and continued until a short time before his death, while Pepra's (although of considerably greater length) only occupies a little over nine years of his busy career world, of culture and of business—and his occupation in later life at Wotton, the beautiful old Surrey country house, with its woods planted by himself, has formed an appropriate background for his partice of succession and succession and displiced man, largely penureque ngure. He was a term and ungurned man, means taken up by the duties of bis family and his social position for although peculiarly fitted for the contemplative life, he did no autougn pecuniary meet to; the continuary arrive the responsibilities of his station, but consistently carried ont in an efficient and thoroughly businesslike manner the imporand duties undertaken by him. All the many books he produced during his life are of interest but Erelyn was not a professed suring us me are or murres our circular was not a processor and his publications were mostly intended to meet some particular want which he had descried. That his judgment was not often at fault is seen by the fact that several of his books went through many editions.

The figure of John Evelyn stands out in our history as a representative of the model English country gentleman—a man of the 'Sen The Ergis, a magnite supported by members of $1 John's college, Cambridge, Mirch 1989, pp. 284—28.

Erelyns disry really tells the history of his life, and tells it The diariet is contented to relate facts and seldom analyses his feelings or gives his opinions nevertheless, his fine character is exhibited in lifelike proportions. Southey said of him that

Sattle from whom nothing is secret, secretly attempted to tooch kim Esting from whom modeling is secret, scarcely attempted to louds kins while String I and the actinous at Political and religious baired, though it sparse not the dead, has never assuled his memory? John Erelyn a father Richard Erelyn, kept a diary and the son soon to follow the father's example in the year 1631 but the ogan to tours are recently commentated until a much later carry we present cursons have been uncorrected unto a more more period of his life, although his birth at Wotton on 31 October 1630 period of the title, attrough the torsid at Protion on of October some inconnected teaching, which began when he are four lears old he are bjeced in the tree school orders must refer to the tree school when he was your years out, no was pasted in the mes where of Southeyer in January 1630 where he remained until he was or continuous at various, now where no remained when we contend in 1637 as a fellow-commoner of Balliel college, Oxford. in 1640 his father died and at the ago of twenty he was left his on master Richard Evelyn was a man of ample mean, his estate own master ancient about $10,000 a year and when high being estimated as morto about x10,000 a Jear and, when ingo shortiff of Surrey and Sumer, he distinguished bilined by his nems or ourses and ourses, so unautousness summer by an princely hospitality. John was the second son but George, the princery near tracked to his brother and always encouraged him to eners, was attached to an occurrer and at any a encouraged and of feel that Wotton was his home. The growing political troubles for that Dutton was an none. The growing postical monoceaned Erelyn to leave England for a time so he emburked for camen areign to seare augment for a time so no entourance. If oldered on 21 July 1641 and made good use of his time in vitiling some of the chief continental towns. He returned to England on some or use the transformation are in a returned to purpose to 19 October and at Christmas, was appointed one of the comp-13 October and, as convening, was appointed one or the complex of the Middle Temple rorels but, wishing to spend the holidays at Wotton, he obtained leave to resign his staff of

Evelyn was a carsiler and a hearty royalist but, as Sir Leelle Stephen says, his seal was tempered with caution. This may be seen in the instance of the battle of Brentford (12 November 1642) between the royal and purisamentary troops. Evelyn came in with his horse and arms junt at the rotreat, and he only stayed with the royal army until the 16th, because it was about to march to Gloucester. Bad he marched with it, he and his brothers would have been exposed to ruin, without any advantage to the king. So he returned to Wotton, and no one knew that he had been with the royal army.

In spite of his attempts to live in retirement at Wotton, he was forced to leave the country, in order to escape the constant pressure upon him to sign the covenant. Therefore, in November 1643, he obtained from Charles I a licence to travel, and he made an extensive teny on the continent, the particulars of which are recorded in the diary in an interesting narrative. The diarast tells just the things we want to know, and many bits of information given by him help us to form a vivid picture of the places which he visited, both in France and Italy The galleys at Marseilles and the beauty of malls at Blois and Tours (where 'call mall was played) are specially noted. He pussed across the Alps from Italy to Genera, and, after travelling along many miles of level country came suddenly to the mountains. He remarks that nature seemed to have swept up the rubbish of the earth in the Alps, to form and clear the plains of Lombardy Bears and wolves abounded in the rocky fastnesses and, the accommodation for travellers being of the most meagre description, they had some excuse for speaking of the horrid mountains in what is now the playground of Europe.

On Thursday 37 June 1647 Evelyn was married by John Earlo (afterwards bishop of Salisbury) to Mary, doughter of Sir Richard Rowse, Charles I's resident at the French court, with whom, on his first visit to Paris, Evelyn became very intimate. His newly married wife was a mere child of fifteen, and when, after an absence of four years, he returned to England, he left her 'under the care of an excellent hady and pradent mother. On 10 October 1617, he kissed the captive king's hand at Hampton court, and gave him an account of certain things be had in charge to tell. He also went to see Sayos court at Deptford, then inhabited by a brother is law of its owner Sir Richard Browne. A little over a year after this, Evelyn himself took up his residence at Sayes court, which was associated with him for many years of his life.

About the same time (January 1648—9) appeared his first publi About the same time (vanuary 1040—1), appeared in mas prior cation, a translation from the French of an emay by François de la enton, a transaction from the French of an essay of François to be Mothe Le Vayer entitled Liberty and Servitude. In the preface, Aroung the variest entitled those by the captive in the protection and in his own copy of this little rolume, he wrote the following pencil an own copy or this intre rounts, no wrote the amounts peaked note. I was like to be call d in question by the Rebells for this booke, being published a few days before His Majority's decollation. At midsummer of the same year (1649) he left England for a time, as it was not then a place where a pronounced royalist could as it was not tren a purce where a pronounced royalis could be with comfort. In September 1651 he visited Hobbes of Malmosbury in Paris, from whose window he saw the procession of the young king Louis XIV (then in his fourteenth year) to parliament, where he took upon himself the government. After parameters, where he took upon mineral the government. After wards, Freijn accompanied für Richard Browne to an andience with the king and his mother The news of the decidre battle of Worcester fought on 3 September did not reach Parls until the Trenty-second of the month. This event dashed all the hopes (twenty-second on one anomal. The event massive an one mopes to toyallata, and Evelyn decided to settle with his wife in England toe royamu, and everyouccured to seeme site one sure on containing in the ment first, at the beginning of 1652, Mrs Evelyo following in June. It was an adventurous Journey for at the time when the ounce at was an entremeavors journey my as one time when the party escaped from Parts, that city was being berieged by Condé.

Thus coded Evelyn's travels alread, which occupied nearly ten rears of his life, and the account of which takes up more than a Joses on the me, and the seasons of which cases up more than a third of the diary. He now quietly settled with his wife in third of the distry ite now quiety settled with our wife in England. In January 1033, he scaled the writings connected with nagrang. In samuary 1000, so scaled the strings connected with his purchase from the commonwealth of Sayos court, for which he ms purcusses from the communication of cases court, for which he properly was securely in his own possession pain about. Once the payments was accurate in the own powersion (though, in 1672, the king would only renew the losse of the partures (mough, in 10/2, the sing would only reliev the lease of the partities for 90 years). Erelyn began to set out the oval garden, which, be for 90 years), area in organ to set out the orat garden, which, he cays, was the beginning of all succeeding gardens, walks, groves, says, was the beginning or all accreting gardens, walks, groves, enclosures and plantations. Before he took it in hand, the place enclosures and punntations. Defore no took it in main, the place was nothing but an open field of one hundred acres, with scarcely was nothing one an open new or one numerous searce, with searcely a hedge in it, so that he had a fine scope for his skill in the art of knowledge that, when he was told that Terence and Plantus were too difficult for him, he wept for very grief and would hardly be perfiled! During these years, Evelyn was in the constant practice of sending abroad intelligence to Charles II, and he mentions, in his diary for 59 October 1857, that he had contracted a friendship with the Dutch ambassador whose information he found of great use in his correspondence with the king.

There is little to record of his experiences during this comthere is notes to record of his life, besides the birth and death of parametry quee persons on me me, occasion one mem area community of the children, and the production of the children of his some of his culturen, and the productive of the culturen of his brain, a notice of which will be found in the bibliography. His oratin a monte of anish was born in 1852 and died in 1858. The father ans teld blond of his pol apo ass so giled aith the sugar of criter curst interest was oven in took win mind in 100%. The territory

We now come to the period when the duries of Evelyn and Pepys cover somewhat the same ground thus there is much about the newly founded Royal Society in both, for the two men were ereatly interested in its proceedings. In December 1660, Boyle, Oldenburg, Denham, Ashmole and Evelyn were elected fellows, and, in the following January Evelyn was one of those whom the king nominated as members of council. From this time forward, the records of the society prove how constant an attendant be was at the meetings. Penys did not loin the society until 1664 In 1672, Evelyn was elected secretary in place of his friend Thomas Hembaw but he only held the office for a single year Ten years afterwards, he was importuned to stand for election as president infirmities were, however growing upon him, and he desired his friends to vote, in his stend, for Sir John Hoskins, who was elected. Eleven years later he was again importuned to take the presidentable, but be again refused. Perrs was president for two years from 1684, and, after his retirement, he continued to entertain some of the most distinguished fellows.

Immediately after the restoration, Evelyn's public life became a very busy one. He was employed on many important commissions, without slackening in his literary labour. In 1861 he published, by the king's special command, Famifaguen, or The meconements of the Arr and Smoke of London dumpated. Charles was pleased with the book, and commanded the author to propere a bill for the next session of parliament to make certain provisions for the prevention of evils caused by smoke in London but the royal interest cooled, and nothing was done.

A curious instance of the value of these diaries in respect to notices of passing events may be found in the narrative of the adoption of a special costume by the king and his court, in opposition to the fashions of the French. The whole story is her, spall as

¹ Diary 37 January 1057/6; and see Evelyn's translation of The Guiden Book of Et John Chrysteness, 1859.
² CL, as to Tradyn's interest in science, and his connection with the Royal Society.

amusing as showing how an international quarrel may arise out of a very small matter. In 1661, Evelyn published a booklet or a feet annual manager in south everyth postuneous a securical and the Mode in which he condemns the tyranny of a foreign fashion, and urger Charles II to form a standard for his people, writing, we have a Prince whose shape is elegant and perfect to admiration. Herrietts, duchess of Orleans, was of the same optolon as to her brother doing fustice to the costume she suggested. She wrote to him on 8 April 1665 Making de Piemes barby told me that for would be stid to see a Assume de Fiennes parrag told me that you would be find to see patient of the vects that are were here, I take the liberty of small put the control of the c cos, and an eare that on your the figure it will look very well!

To Court. It being the first time His Majority per himself solemnly int the Eastern Intelligence of rest, changing doublet, still collect homest science to the changing doublet, still collect homest closely of the changing doublet, still collect homest collection. the fastern inner or raw, changing domes, and color bancs on coosts had a scooly dress, after the Parsian mode, with girdle, or strips and some street, note a somety orest, alter the frames mode, with girdle, or straps and some strings and garders into bouches, of which some wave set with presions atmost

The courtiers wagered the king that he would not persist in his resolution, and they soon won their beta. Evelyn, in his book, takes credit for having suggested this change of costsume. Pepps gives an account (22 November 1660) of the sequel of the story which is that Louis XIV caused all his footness to be put into which is that Louis ALY camed as his seconds to be put into Yests like those adopted by Charles II. Pepps adds. It makes me and to soo that the King of England has become so little as to have this affront offered to him.

nave the autom outered to min.

After the restoration, special attention was paid to the wantof the navy, and the officers of the may found great difficulty I. or too pary, and the omeers or the mary count great unitarity.

obtaining the timber required in shipbeliding. There had been a obtaining the timeer requires in surpressions. Ancre test seem a sections destruction of woods counsed by the glassworks, the from serious ucacuccus or access caused by the figures and partly by the increase of abligding and this destructo had culminated during the period of the civil warz. Not only was destruction rampont, but cultivation was reglected. In its was destruction rampium, the continuous was respected in the second difficulty the nary office propounded certain queries to the Royal society who gave them to Erelyn to answer Thus originated coccety who gave them to arrays to account that nolle book Sylva (1601), which revived the spirit of planting the notice over open thousand influence upon the fature of an augusus, and exercises an entrinous minotonic apast are surface to the king Many millions of timber frees have been propagated and planted at the imitigation and by the sole direction of this work Frelyn obtained his first public appointment in May 1069, when he was chosen one of the commissioners for reforming the anen to mae caneca one or the commissioners for renorming the buildings, ways, streets and encumbrances, and regulating the Carreright, Jaine (Mrs Heavy Ady), Madame, p. 110.

backney coaches, in London. About the same time, he was appointed on a commission for the purpose of enquiring how the revenues of Greabam college had been disposed of, and why the salaries of the professors were not improved. Little came of either of these commissions. He was appointed on others, but he was not in full public employment until 1004, when he was named one of four commissioners for dealing with the sick and wounded in the Dutch This was a most operous duty which caused him immense anxiety, not only in providing accommodation and food, but as to meeting the difficulty of obtaining money In May 1665 Evelyn was called into the council chamber before the king, when he explained why the expenses of the commission were not less than £1000 a week. In June, he saked for £20,000, and he obtained the use of Savoy hospital, where he fitted up fifty beds. The plague was then raying in London, and he was left simple-handed to deal with the vast business of providing for the sick and wounded prisoners. It is interesting to note that, when others fled, Pepys, as well as Evelyn, remained to do their duty in the places-stricken city

On 17 September 1686, Evelyn received news of the defeat of the Dutch by lord Sandwich, and learned that 2000 prisoners had been sent to him to dispose of. He was at a loss how to deal with this great responsibility but proposed the erection of an infirmary at Chatham, and made an elaborate estimate of the cost, which he cent to Pepys. The commissioners of the navy encouraged the scheme, but they were without money and the project fell through. At this time. Evelyn required £7000 for the weekly expenses of his charge, but he had great difficulty in obtaining it. Money was still owing to him long after the revolution, and he had to petition for his rights so late as March 1709, when some of his just charges were disallowed. The highest office held by Evelyn was that of one of the commissioners appointed to execute the office of lord privy seal, in September 1685 when the second earl of Clarendon was sent to Ireland as lord lieutenant. Evelyn took the test in February 1686, and went to lodge at Whitehall, in the lord prive seal's spartments. It was not an easy position for him, as he was mable to agree to James Il's arbitrary proceedings and he refused to put his seal to certain documents for purposes forbidden by acts of parliament. In March 1687 the commissioners were relieved of their duties. Evelyn was highly gratified by his appointment as treasurer of Greenwich hospital in 1695 and laid the first stone of the new building on 30 June of the following year. At the time of the great fire of London, he was ready with help and, like

Christopher Wren and Robert Hooke, he prepared a plan of considerable morit for the improved building of London. To the two great diaries we own many vivid pictures of this great calamity great matter we own many time presures or some great common which was turned into a blossing by the self reliant courage of the men and women of London.

Ereitn was in every way admirable in his public life but our interest in him centres in his private virtues. He was a fast friend, who stood by those he loved through good report and evil report He was not ashamed to visit those who were in diagnos, and, as the was not measured to rate whose with more in constitute overy many as always ready to contribute overything in his power to perfect other men s endeavours. His charity was not of the kind which costs nothing for we find that, when Joron Taylor was in want, Erelyn settled an annual allowance upon hin Both his benorelence and his taste were exhibited in his patronage of Grinling Glibbons. The large correspondence which he left bolind him shows him to have been in relations of close intimators with some of the most worthy persons of his time. Charendon consided him respecting the magnificent collection of portraits which he gethered together and Tenhon saled his advice when projecting a library for the parish of St Martin in the Fields paymaning a morary nor one param or on marian in one renormalization of manuscripts which he had once possessed and freatly rained gradually passed out of his custody through the carelessness of borrowers. Some were lent to the dake of and currently of contracts. Comes were then to the dutte of his library Ramet borrowed others for his History of the Refrom stoney posters posterior varies are the stateout we are sto of the printers. Still more were borrowed by Pepps, and these are now in the Pepysian library at Magdalena.

The best known of his friends was the beautiful Margaret The best amount of the Godolphin), who, in October 1672 (when page (sicrounts are ownspirity and in occupant total (when ane was twenty years on age, so to the day (3 September introduce trigonality to reput says in the many to expensive 1078) that she regarded him as a father a brother and what is more a friend ... hhe was most deare to my wife and affectionate to my children. Her Life which he wrote some years after her to my customer and the same to light in 1647 under the ocati and rete in manuscript, may ear the organ an early under one oditorship of bishop Samuel Wilberforce. This rolume has catabcontorning of memory comments of morniones. And votome mas center listed itself in popular enterm as the revelation of a benefitful and then in polymer extern so the reterment of a comments of the state able with exqubite taste to make the parity of a woman's life. ance with varyunity training to means the pointry on a normal witter, in the midst of a victors court, reveal iteclE

Yady Sylvius, to whom Evelyn afterwards addressed his Life of Mrs Godolphys, introduced Margaret Blagge to Erelyn. She was married privately to Sidney Godolphin (afterwards earl of Godolphin), at the Temple church, on 16 May 1675 on which Evelyn remarks, 'Her not accommissing me with this particular of a good while after occasioned a friendly quarrel between us. On 8 September 1678, she gave birth to a son, and she died of nuerneral fever on the 9th of Sentember following. Evelyn's expression of his crief occurries some space in the diary but he adds. It is not here that I pretend to give her character having dealers to consecrate her worthy life to posterity. Her husband was so completely overcome by his srief at her loss that the entire care of the funeral was committed to Evelyn' The two men who loved her best looked over and sorted her papers, and they were astonished 'to see what she had written, her youth considered.

We have great cause to be grateful for the Lefe of Mrs Godolnkin, a book which, written with fidelity and charm, presents to me a negtralt of a woman who lived for those around her and. while always seeking heavenly guidance in her difficult position at court, was never austere, but moved in her proper sphere with an air of bright cheerfulness seasoned with witty sneech. Her life. however, was a great trial, and, when, at last, she was allowed to take leave of the king and queen, her blogranher tells us the moment she sets foots in the couch her eyes sparkled with joy roses of her cheeks were soe fresh and her counterance see gay as if with the rest of her perfections she had carried all the beautyes as well as all the virtue of the court sway with her too. As she left the prosonce chamber a whierer went round the circle- the court had never such a starre in all its hemimiere.

Evelyn was a good husband and a fond father and the most pathetle portions of the diary are devoted to the troubles which came upon him owing to the early deaths of many of his children. His widow thus testified in her will to her husband's devotion to her

His care of my education was such as might become a father a lover a friend and a hashand, for instruction, tenderness, affection and fidulity to the last moment of his life; which obligation I mention with a gratified to his memory, ever dear to me; and I must not omit to own the sense of my parent's care and goodness in placing me is such worthy hands.

I Lady Sunderland, a woman of a different type, wrote to her favourite sorrespondent Heary Sidney: Mr Godolphia, I believe, will best like your saying nothing to him on that subject, for I dare owner there neither in, nor will be, any such thing or his marriage. Diery of Henry Sidney od. Blemeous, R. W. vol. L. B. E.B.

The publication of Evelyns diary only increased the fame of the writer and added a faller portraiture of one who was well or the writer and amount a range present of the other hand, the fame of Pepps had so far except recognition at the time of the publication of his diary that it was an entirely new man or and heavestern of the meets of the arthurst new and of the diary has had the effect of niging lovers of Poppa to obtain further information respecting him, with the result that we have come to know much more respecting his life-history and this know lodge has added greatly to our approcation of the importance of the audior. The reputation of Samuel Pepps had much changed at various times. When he died his great qualities were generally recognised, although he was half forgotten as your rolled by bet it is to the credit of the admirally that his name has always been homograd there. Thus, his reputation remained the property an intelligent few until the end of the first quarter of the nin an intentions to a minimum con or the mass director or the original and original an of a work in which the inner life of the diarist is portrayed in a or a work in which the most the or the three procedent or parallel namer amountary unsque and witness made in writing but their suthors wrote them for the public eye, and their disclourse are made in such a manner as to attract the reader's sympathy. This was not so with Popys's diary for there can be no doubt that its was not so with representing the mean han be no notice tractile.

Discovered by other ever than those of Pages were never interaction to be seen by other dies than those or the writer. Everyone read and was entertained. "A new man was added to the circle of our intimate friends—a man whose consecure to the circle of our minimum riverons—a man whose tre-fersions are ever fresh and can herer than Can we be surprised commons are ever treas and can cover time. An we be surprised that, for a time, little was thought of Popys contains the disryf With a roylered public interest in the history of the nary came the rediscovery of Pepps's great work at the admiralty o remedirery or representation the may office without any knowledge connect represents one of the may as a whole and yet in or any puricular sulps or or the may as a stone same yes, in a few yours, according to high authority he had become the right a ter your, accurang to age assuring up and occurse too rights hand of the hary and not only understood more of administration hand of the hary and not only understood more of summarization than all the other officers (some of them brilliantly successful tent at the votes varies (some or their community succession) put together but in spite of opposition, was able to admirate) put together out in state of opposition, was said to comp on the work of his office with no small success. Pepps was carry on the work of his outco with no summ success.

A historical character of mark, for he figured in all the most a nationizal character of male, for no matrix in an time most important scenes that occurred during his official life. He acted najoritant scenes and, occurred ourning an ourcess one, see across with vigour during the Dutch war, and, when the Dutch floet was and vigous usering two powers war and, when the structure nece was among the few who, during a time in the accuracy in 1007 too was among two for which curring a time of malional humiliation, deserved credit for their conduct. His name, too, stands out among those who performed their duty during the terrible times of the plague and the fire of London. He suffered during the reign of terror caused by the action of the promoters of the trials of persons supposed to be involved in the so-called poptah plot. He was committed to the Tower in May 1679 but, when brought before the privy council to answer charges against him, he covered his influential concelles with confusion, and his defence was so complete that he was ordered to be set free without a trial. His but great work, as secretary of the admiralty was to reform the navy which had been brought into a dengerous state by an incompetent commission.

Samuel Penys was born on 28 February 1632/3, probably in Landon since he tells us that as a small boy he went to school with his how and arrows across the fields to Kinguland. Later it is fair to amprove that his kineman and patron through life. Sir Edward Montago, first earl of Sandwich, the 'My lord of the diary, sent him to school, first to Huntingdon grammar school. then to St Pauls school and afterwards to the university of Cumbridge. We may take it for certain that John Pepra never had sufficient money for the satisfactory education of his son. Samuel seems to have done fairly well at St Paula, and he always retained an affection for the school. At Cambridge, he was first entered at Trinity hall but, subsequently, he was transferred to Magdalene college, of which, in after life, he became one of the best friends1 In 1655, he married Elizabeth St Michel a protiv girl the daughter of an impecunious Frenchman and his Knellsh wife. Mr and Mrs Pepys were a young and inexperienced couple. the bridegroom being twenty-two years old and the bride only fifteen. The newly-married pair went to live at Sir Edward Montagu's London house, and Pepys seems to have acted as a sort of steward or factotum to My lord. On 26 March 1658, Peprs underwent an operation for the stone, which was removed and, afterwards, he kept the anniversary of the operation as a festival. In the same year, he became clerk (at a salary of £50) to George Downing (who gave his name to Downing street).

¹ See Perroll, R. X., History of Magdalous College, Combridge, shap, cr.

In someofice with the date of the searcings, there is a most incorproductable content. Both Party and his wife ballered that they were married on 10 October and they kept that day as the anniversary of the scaling. The register however give the date of the searcing as Douenker 1. In the absence of further induresation on the carbon paid, it seems that the outly possible explanation is fall a religious exemption of some series was partnersed on 10 October 1565, just before the learner were published, and that the affeld marriage took place, as above stated, on I Douenker

į

The diary opens on 1 January 1000 when Pepps was no longer I the usery opens on a value of the state of (which stood on part of the site of the present India office). In a Your humble way of life, his family countring of himself, his wife and yery number way or me, an inimit command or miment, me with one one servant named Jane. During the frosty weather they have not a coal in the house, and Samuel is forced to dine at his father's, not a coas in the nume, seas comfortable as he can in the garret. That or to make minor, as commutative as no can in the Secretarian strength in the larder is not very plentifully supplied is seen by the fact that on 1 Pelumary he and his wife dine on pease pudding—a very on a required no and me who one or press produces and different meal from most of those recorded in the diary but a unionent trout index of shoes retrained in Peppas condition. He had ever From campo seem occurred in a spine committee. An area from for welcoming the restoration, as it was through the change of government that he obtained a comfortable income. This was or governments ones no occurred a commonwealers mechanical and an arrange of the career, when he became a prosperous

Through Montagu a influence be was appointed secretary to the two generals of the fleet (Monck and Montage). On 30 March 1000 Montage and his party went on board the Naseby the hip in which he had salled to the Sound, Pepps accompanying blm. in which he had stated to the country ropps accompanying and, in the previous year. Things went alowly as well as surely so the disperconained in the neighbourhood of Deal, and it was not until 3 May that Montagn received the king's declaration and a letter to the two generals. He dictated to Popps the words in which he wished the rote of the fleet in Larouner to rely a can worth an wince no sauce the vice of the new means are and the conched. The captains all came on board the Caselry and Popy. connect. Also cuspasses are comes on severy two vascory and reply and the lotter and declaration to them and, while they were remu the fetter and occurrance to ment and, while they were discoursing on the subject, he pretended to be drawing up the comparing on the surject, he factorized to be unwant up to form of vote, which Montagn had already settled. When the form of voic, which monthly had already source. Then the read it passed at once and the seamen cried God transmin was cont, a passent as once and mo scamen trien one bless King Charles, a cry that was echoed by the whole fleet. About the middle of May the English fleet was of the Dutch count, and, on the 22nd, the duker of lork and Gloricater came on board the Assety Perry took the opportunity to bespeak on noaru the Amery representative oppositions of the former and was overloyed when the dake called him Perra. This was the beginning of their long friendship. Telps. And was the occurring or their social community and through Montagn a influence, Pepps was appointed clerk the priry scal (which, for a time, turned out to be a very profitable appointment) as well as clerk of the acts. Montagu Profitation alpointments) as any as core or the acts of the fold Pepps. We must have a little patience and we will rise tout topy we meantime I will do you all the food jobs I can (2) June 1869). Perpas salary was fixed at £350 a year at this time however fixed salaries bore little relation to actual income, which was largely obtained from fees. At the opening of the diary, Pepys was only worth £40 and, at one time, found it difficult to pay his rent but, by June 1667, he had accumulated £6900. Besides his malary, he had the advantage of a house in the navy office. Seething lane, which he found very comfortable after the little home at Westminster The diary contains many particulars of the new apartments, and of those belonging to his colleagues. He lived here during all the time the diary was being written, and he did not leave until he obtained the more important post of secretary of the admiralty. One of the most interesting passages in the diary relates to the great speech he made at the bar of the House of Commons on 6 March 1667-8. A storm of indirection had been stirred up against the mayy office, and this storm burst in parliament when some members demanded that officers should be put out of their places. The whole labour of defence fell upon Penys, and he presented his case with such success, in a speech which occupied more than three hours in delivery that the House received it as a satisfactory defence, and his fellow-officers, who were unable to assist him, were naturally overloved at the result. The orator was congratulated on every side, and the flattery he received is set down in the dlary in all good faith. Sir William Coventry addressed Pepps the next day with the words 'Good morrow Mr Peprs that must be Speaker of the Parliament House, and the solicitor-general protested that he spoke the best of any man in England. No report of this important speech is known, and The Commons Journals merely contain a statement that the principal officers of the pavy appeared at the bar Pepys s name not being mentioned.

This was his first great public achievement but he had previously (1605) shown what grit was in him. One of the most unsatisfactory divisions of the naval accounts related to the pursers. He was early interested in the victualling department, out of which he afterwards made much money and, on 12 September 1603, we find him trying to understand the method of making Purser's accounts, which is very needful for ma, and very hard. On 28 November 1603, he was pleased to have it demonstrated that a Purser without professed cheating is a professed lear twice as much as he gets. Pepps received his appointment of surveyor general to the victualling office chiefly through the influence of Sir Willam Corentry and, on 1 January 1605/6, he addressed a letter and New Yeares Guift on the subject of the pursers to his distinguished friend. He relates, in the diary how he wrote the letter and how Sir William praised his work to the

Pepps a babit of sitting up late reading and writing by candle light began to tell upon his creatent, and, in January 1063/4, he found that his sight failed him for the first time. On 5 October 1664, he consulted the colebrated Edmund Cocker as to the glass which around best suit his over at night but the weakness of the eyes co a outst to a suite size of the suite and the proposed to get some green speciacion How the oresight became weaker so that the diary had to be tow the cycangus because meaner so that the country has been discontinued, we all know to our great cost. On 16 May 1669 pepps drew up a rough copy of a pelition to the duke of York for leave of alternoe for three or four months. A few days after this centry the duke took him to the king, who expressed his great regret for the came of his trouble and gave him the leave he desired. On 31 May 1009 Pepps made his last entry and the diary ends with these words of deep and subdued feeling

And thus ends all that I dends I shall ever be able to do with my own even And time ends all that I death I shall ever be able to do with my own even in the kapping of my Journal. I being not able to do it any longer baring. as no adequate of any eventual. A nearly not some to on it any source narrangement and the fact of page 10 and any eyes almost every time that I take a page in does now so long as to thick my syne almost every time that I take a pen in my hand; and therefore whichere comes of it I must ferber. And so I take the control of the con ary named and moreover which is almost as much as to see myself so into outsian myseu to time course, which is almost so since as to see myseu go into my grave; for which, and all the disconforts that will accompany my bological and all the course of the c blind, the good God prepare me! E. P.

We know that Pepys did not become blind, and that he lived for over thirty three years after the closing of the diary but, having over many three years after the change of the many but naving closed the manuscript, he does not appear to have had the courage The life of Pepps after the finish of the diary must be told in brief although it forms a most important period of his career He took advantage of his leave of absence to make a four with his wife in France and Helland, which seems to have done him his wise in grands and invasion, which seems to more more must permanent good but it was fatal to Mrs Pepra, who died shortly after their retarn home on 10 hovember 1000 at the early age of twenty nine. Pepys suffered scently from the death of his wife, to twenty mon relys sumered greatly from the desire of the stand to the whom he was rejoint some steeps attached. He returned to me mary office, but only for a short space of time for at the end of the many ounce, outcomy on a same a special or time for as the end or the property of the admirally the doke Jen 10/2, no was appointed accretionly of the automatic the office of lock being suspended and king Charles taking over the office of lord high admiral with the help of a commission. When Pepps or norm men animals, what the neighbor a commission. When a cipy of a commission is no doubt, americal entered upon two boars of greater manner as, no board, american to the admiralty much of the work he had previously done at the to me amountly mount or two sters no tast previously occur as two possessed when under Pepys's superintendence. He made great improvements in the personnel and business of the office and, during six years, be exercised a wise authority, causing officers to be smart and constant to their dury

Dimeter came suddenly, without fault on Pepras part, and his career was closed for a time. In 1678, the poplah plot was invented, and the death of Sir Edmund Berry Godfrey drove the noblic mad with alarm, while unprincipled men took the opportunity of compromising their enemies in order to bring about their condemnation on false issues. Pepra had enemies who sought to sacrifice him by means, chiefly of the fictitious evidence of a miscreant named John Scott (calling himself colonel Scott). He was first attacked through his clerk Samuel Atkins but, when the latter was brought to trial, in December 1078, as an accessory in the supposed murder of Godfrey he was able to prove an alibi Then, his enemies opened fire upon Penys himself and, on 92 May, he and Sir Anthony Deane, his fellow member of parliament for Harwich, were sent to the Tower on a baseless charge. Pepys, with his usual thoroughness, set to work to obtain evidence against Scott and sent agents to the continent and to the plantations in North America, who returned with a large number of certified documents proving the untrustworthiness of Scotts evidence and his general dishonesty. These, when presented to the privy council. were sufficient to allow the prisoners to be relieved of their bail and set free on 19 February 1679/80. Scott refused to acknow ledge the truth of his original deposition, and John James. previously a butler in Peppa a service, confessed, on his death bed in 1880, that he had trumped up the whole story relating to his former master's change of religion at the instigation of William Harbord member of parliament for Thetford one of the diariet's most mallement enemics.

Peyra was now out of office, and remained unemployed for some time, although he retained the confidence of the king. He was sent to Tangler with lord Dartmouth, in 1683, and wrote a diary of his proceedings during his stay there, which gives an interesting picture of the condition of the place and a vivid account of its maindministration. In 1684, he-was again appointed secretary to the admirally when the greatest undertaking of his life was begun. The navy had been brought to a most serious condition of decay by the neglect of an incompetent commission. When he took office, he determined to reform the administration and to supply the country with a sufficient number of thoroughly sound ships, and this intention he carried out with triumphant sound supe, and some measured no carrier out what examples success. Then came the revolution, and the man who had not spared any pains in his endeavour to place the country in a proper ondition of national defence was sent by the new government to communi of manufacture as an enemy to the state. After a time, he was released by the help of stalwart friends and he now tune, the was recessed by the field of statement in which all his old friends and his pupils and followers gathered round him so that from any me pupm and considered and treated as the Nester for the rest or one me, no was communicated and accounts and account of the Nary his advice always being respectfully received. He wrote his Memorres of the Navy (1690), which book contains full arous us accounted of the great work he had done, and kept up his general paracutates or soo great work to that done have ache up in sources in intellectual pursuits for some years holding social gatherings of fellows of the Royal Society at his home on Saturday erenings. In 1700, he removed from York buildings (Buckingham oreunga in 1/00, no removed from 1 ora comming (occanquam street) to what Evelyn calls his Paradisian Clapham? Here, he lired with his old clerk and friend William Hewer but his inaren with the constantly in the house. On 26 May 1703, he breathed his last in the presence of the learned George Hickes, the non Juring dean of Worcester who bears witness to the big mindedness of the man, his patience under suffering and the fortent plety of his end. He died full of honour-a recognition thoroughly described by his public conduct through life but he was shabbily treated by the mee in power The last two Stowart kings were treated by the mee in power the mass two otenwart sings were many thousands of pounds—£28,007 & 11d, to be exact—in his debt, and the new government did not see that they were called to help him in recovering it. They might, however have considered how much the country was indepted to him for a strong navy and remembered that most of the money owing to him had been spent

1

Pepps a diary is so various in its interest that it is not easy in a few words to indicate where its chief distinction lies. The absolute and transparent truth of the parratire naturally explains much, but the vitality of the man and his interne interest in the pageant of life supplies the motive power Important orents gain by the strength of their presentment, and trivialities delight in by the way in which they are narrated. Here is not only a picture of the lite and manners of the time, but, also, the picture of the heart of a man, and the exposure soggests a psychological problem difficult of solution. We naturally sak how is came to pass that the writer of the diary arrived at a perfection of style suitable to the character of what he had to relate. Is it possible that he had previously practised the writing of a journal? We see the man grow in knowledge and power as the diary proceeds, but the narrative is equally good at the beginning and at the end. Pepys apparently made notes on alige of paper and then elaborated them without any unnecessary delay. It is remarkable that there should be few or no corrections in the written manuscript. He wrote in secret, and, when he unguardedly (at the time of his detention in the Tower) told Sir William Coventry that he kept a diary he was immediately afterwards sorry for his indiscribed it is also matter for wonder that he should have trusted a binder with the precious book. Was the binder brought into the house to hind the naces under the writter's ere!

Secret of the Charm of Pepys's Diary 259

The brilliancy of the narrative and the intimacy of the confessions so thoroughly charm the reader that, in many cases, he overlooks the fact that, although Pepys was devoted to pleasure, he was not absorbed by it, but always kept in view the main object of his life-the perfection of the English navy Penys was not a man of letters in the same way that Evelyn was one. When the latter was interested in a milliont, he wanted to write upon it. and not only wanted to, but did write, as is shown by the list of his works in our hibliography. This was not the case with Paora. Farly in his official life, he proposed to write a history of the pavy, and collected materials for the purpose but, although he talked about the project, he never got at all forward with it. His Memoires of the Napy was prepared under an urgent desire to present his apologia, and was only a chapter in the great work that had long been projected. This little book contains a thoroughly effective statement of his case but it is not lively reading or a work of any literary morit. The question, therefore, arises why the diary is different, and why it is remarkable as a literary effort.

The conrice are all made with care, and there is no hurry about any of them but we must remember that they were written fresh from the heart, and many hard judgments passed on colleagues were the result of temporary indignation. He was himself careful tidy and methodical, and he was impatient of untidiness and improvidence in these around him. His wile often britated him by her carelessness and want of method, but his poor sister Paulina Pepys, comes off as badly as anyone in the diary. She did not receive much kindness from her brother and sister in-law although Pepys did his best to find her a husband, and, when the search was followed by success, gave her a handsome dowry1 The pages of the diary are full of particulars respecting behis a serious seasons' and their bost in constant musical bear more and their post in constant musical bear more and their post in constant musical bear more and their post in the passes of the passes of their post in the passes of the pa reprise various servants, and outer part in commants musical per formances. It is necessary to bear in mind that most of these secrants were more properly companions or maids of Mrs Pepps. Popyr's system of rows and the excuses made for not carrying them out are very singular and amusing. He feared the waste of time that would arise from a too frequent attendance at the theatro, and from his tendency to drink. The fines which he levied upon himself lad some infinence in wearing him from had habita. apon minimum man some minimum in wearing min from the nature. It does not appear that he neglected his work, even when taking pleasure for although the working day was often irregular in presents the work was done either early in the morning or late at night, to make up for occasional long sittings after the midday as many to make up for occasional need actuage after we make, med. The diary contains a mine of information respecting theatres ment. And usury contains a name of miscensium responsing and and musio there is much about the baying of his books and book cases, but it should be borne in mind that the larger portion of the Peppalan library now preserved at Magdalene college, or the represent morery now preserved at anguactor our Cambridge, was purchased after the conclusion of the diary

It has been said that Pepys knew Erelyn a great deal better than we know that stately gentleman but the ree know Pepps a than we allow these states; generation not the wave above representation of the diction, two passages from Pepras diary come to mind. On 10 September 1005, ho joined a party at Greenwich, where to contenuer 1000, no joined a party as differential, where Sir John Minnes and Evelyn were the life of the company and our voin animost and everyn were the interior the company and fall of mirth. Among other humours, Evelyn repeated some verses introducing the various acceptations of may and can, which made introducing the various acceptations of may and can, which make all present nearly die of laughing. This is certainly a fresh side at present nearty use or sauguing. Annu is certainly a treat size of his character. On the following 5th of November Pepps visited of an enabled of the former of the latter read to the former extracts Everyn as required, when the natter road to the former extracts from an easily be had in hand, also a part of a play or two of his Iron an easy to mat in mand, and a part of a pany or two or mis making, and some short poems. In fine a most excellent person making, and some anort poems. In use a most excessor person be is and must be allowed a little for a little conceitedness but be he is and more on amore is a ment out a ment concerned one one may well be so, being a man so much above others. So Pepps helps us to know Erelyn better and love him none the less while, as for Pepps bimself, we certainly know him better than Erelyn knew him, though we readily accept Erelyn a noble tribute to his ance must inough we reason accept everyus monte tribute to ma merits. His frullities be has himself recorded but, even were there neous the matter of the subject than is to be found in the diary to other orangine on the saugest than as to be round in the user; itself it would abow him to have been a patriot and a true and stendfast friend.

I Have described to Locally of Prype Cockers - are the representatives of Remod Perys.

H. OTHER WRITERS OF MEMOURS AND LETTERS

A,

The anonymous Manoures de la Vie du Comte de Gramont, unblished for the first time at Cologne in 1713, is universally cknowledged to be a masterplece of French literature, in fact, Voltairs went so far as to say that the author was the first to liscover the emential genius of the French language. Yet this book was written by an Englishman, and it deals chiefly with the English court of Charles IL. It was carelessly translated into English by Abel Boyer (a French Huguenot who settled in England and wrote histories of king William III and queen Anne) and published in the year after that of the appearance of the original work. This translation was touched up by Sir Walter Scott and has generally been used in the various editions of the English version. No first-rate writer has been at the pains of retranslating it and making it a masterplece of English proce. Some of the blunders made by the original translator have been continued without correction, and have given considerable trouble1 The names of persons mentioned in the original French are often wrong, as Stwart for Stewart and 'Hubert for Hobert and so forth, but, in the English translation, they are usually given with an initial followed by a line, this allowed of the publication, at the price of twopence, of a needed Key to the Memours'

The author was Anthony Hamilton, third son of Sir George Hamilton and grandson of the earl of Aborcorn. At the end of the first chapter of his book, he wrote 'To himself we owe these Memoirs since I only hold the pen. Report told how Gramont dictated his Memoirs to Hamilton in the year 1701 and sold the manuscript to a publisher for fifteen hundred Herriz. When Fontanelle, then consor of the press, saw the manuscript, he is said to have retused to license the publication, on account of the scandalous conduct of the hero in cheating at cards which is described in the third chapter. There is little suthority for this report, and Cramont is only known as a brilliant talker and not as an author

¹ Thes, Elizabeth Devemport, the netwes who took the part of Becolum in Devemant's Steps of Rhotes, has been contract with Anne Marchett, who was Roman in Law's Rorel Queen. In the original Franch, we find the relationstit. Let this de Retriess, done was pitch asserted; a but this is incorrectly transferred by Hoper: particularly the part of Bersan in the Strid Queen.

³ In the modern additions, Mademoiselle is branzisted as Mine; but even Beyer knew better than this, and always perhald Mrs. We know what Breigns says of the issum Mine, and B certainly should not be allocated to the meanes or moids of known;

The book is divided into eleven unequal chapters, of which the first fire are short and rotate only to continental advantures This portion closes with the chevaller Gramon's bankingent from the French court owing to his positions attentions to Mile La Motte Hondapcourt, one of Louis XIV's mistrosee. This escapadbrought him to England, and chapters 77 to 31 are devoted to the doings of the English court Hamilton knew nothing of Gramont' edrentures abroad, and this portion has all the marks of having been taken down from Gramont's dictation. The English portion of the book is quite different in mode of treatment, and, here, Gramont does not relate his own adventures as before. In some scenes he does not even appear and Hamilton evidently wrote from his own intimate knowledge about subjects and persons unlikely to be known so well to Gramont, as a foreigner

If is most improbable that Hamilton should have handed over his manuscript, upon which he must have spent much time and in manuscripe, upon which no make mare specie mount and com-labour to be disposed of by Gramont as his own. Moreover, mount to be uniqueed in by Gramons as ins own account Hamilton waited for six years after Gramons death in 1707 natured wanted for any Jeans after transcents despit in any, and then haved the work at Cologne instead of at Paris. N doubt, although many of the actors in the scandalous acens related were dead, some influential persons still lived, who would toucous sere used, some minutures prisons som area, son some one all their influence to prevent the publication. In 1713, bow over all manifold was sixty-series years of age. They be whited to see his helioved book in reint he head to said. South the white he head to said. see his beloved book in print, he had to find a publisher with as little delay as possible.

The question as to the truthfulness of the details related by The question as to the stratimum or the desaus remieu of Hamilton is one of the greatest importance. In reply to Lord Halles's remark that the chronology of the Memory is not CARRET, HORROW Walpole exclaimed. What has that book to do otace, morace markens cattained, mas mas that book to do with chronology; Hallam, likewise, was of opinion that the with chronology; liming meware, was or opinion that the Memory scarcely challenge a place as historical. It must be negative manager continues a piece as management it must be admitted that Hamilton produced a book which is too much a aumitted that it is not produced a come which is the moral a work of art to be entirely trustworthy and the subject-matter work or are so so conserve successoring and successmenter is often arranged for effect, which would acareely have been allowed if strict accumely had been the main object.

The king and queen with their source made two rights to Training Wells, one in Its has the stat queen with their sects made two years to Tembering Wells, one in the other in 1600 but the arthur confuses the incidents and make the two for each the other in 1675 bed the author sources the incidence that makes the step within the one. There was good recome for this in the foreign of these flexible that and single the contraction of the while held one. There was good states for this to be surget of the that had deposed the fine the wilds were made when the surface wrote his book. Several of the abstractions these the varie were made when the states whose an soon. Devent of the adventures are the recognised by Papper and, in these mans we are this in this day. described are also resourced by Pryys and, in these mass. We are take to allow a state. Near Contingham (appendix to The Sawy of Neal Gays, 1822, p. 182) with history to the account of the allowed to the translation of the Point Considerate (appendix to 234 King of Max (1979, 1527, p. 152) are attention to the chromatopy of the Memoirs left, existinguish of makes in the date of Community of the Memoirs left, existinguish to make the chromatopy of the Memoirs left, existinguish to make the chromatopy of the Memoirs left, and the chromatopy of the chromatopy of the Memoirs left, and the chromatopy of the Chromat five some industions of the chromatop of the Moment; but, experiencially be made a minimal in the date of Grammat's marriage with he will Hamilton filter of the

Anthony Hamilton became an intimate friend of Gramont immediately after his arrival in England but he never mentions himself in his book. Moreover, he purposely confuses the cir cumstances and date of Gramont's marriage with his sister Elizabeth Hamilton, which actually took place in December 16631

There is evidence that the chevalier de Gramont and his wife left London for France in November 1664 and took up their per manent residence there. They appear to have made frequent virits to the English court in succeeding years but their settlement in France in itself proves that the later portion of the book, some of the incidents in which seem to have occurred in the year 1669 must have been written by Hamilton without help from Gramont. Therefore, the following putsage from the last chapter can hardly be considered to be written in good faith

We profess to insert nothing in these Hemoire but what we have from the mosth of him whose actions we transmit to posterity

The subject of these Memoirs was an III formed man-it was said that he had the face of an apo-and his character was thoroughly worthless. He does not appear to have possessed even the most elementary feelings of honour as he is proved to have been a cheat. Doubtless, his attentions had compromised mistress Hamilton, or her brothers would not have been anxious for the marriage, as the lady had had many more eligible sultors. It may be said that Hamilton has performed a feat in making so showy and profligate a man passable as the hero of his book but even he is not able to speak highly of Gramont as a husband.

This well known story is told in a letter from Lord Maltert to Richard Hamilton (written about twenty-series years after the marriage). O'smoot, being raddenly (Frames access French-warms press some on mannage). Cramerous, using amounts recalled to Frames, was on the point of returning without mixtures Hamilton (to whom he had made violent love), and and got as the as Dover, when he was swratches by the as the annex country area, and an proper are as a service, when we was revisions by the large is too brothers. Garge and Anthony. They at once put this question to him-Chrysler & Gramma, wherever ries sold & Lendre! To which, the charalter Continues as orresponding assessment of the continues of Lemma and the marriage was momentum.

On 22 Describer in that year, Peyra noted; This day I hear for certain that Day Describer in tost year, Pepys noses; This day I hear for owtain that day Gastlemains is termed Popish. In Mastration of this entry Lord Raylerodes pictured as strate from a settler of the second d'Estrades to Louis III—in which he water that the scennings of character de Granous and the occurration of Madama de when one the nations of the rank day. This fast would have be published from the elderment in the Memotry that Grancori was resched to France by his sixter the the manufacture in the attention to the control of the chair being but given bles here to statements or construction of the found that it was all a mistake. Bits brother married do cause, we see the service, he sould not a see as a second that country text seem of created, had seeker from the high for him to go back again without appearing at south for William Measure fixed the date of the consumers recorded in the Memoir from 1653 to 1600; but Octalingham flats the longer period of May 1603 to October Hey supposing as we have already seen, that Granocci remained in England until

The author certainly had ever before his eyes the great aim of patting his sister in a prominent position, and wiping out of arist parting an anear in a prominent respecting her. In this he has succeeded, and ahe stands out as the one woman in the book of whom nothing ill can be said. Many of the women described on whom proming in can be said cased to the sound described in the Hemotry, such as Cestlemaine and Shrewbury probably in nio stoscorry, such as casaconstino and companied because the many in the story of their but we may hope that some, at least, of the others were less vicious than they tope time sense, as recase or time visical wave received street wave, are painted for Hamilton was one of those authors who will not are justices for manufacture to make a reputation, and no see a posite unit aims to be accrutinised too keenly by him in order to prove it untruthful. We have seen that at least one pure woman Erely a friend Mrs Godolphin—Hred for a time in a court which was a hotbed of corruption but even she, because she was not has a nonced of currenason our ered and necessive and was a contempt in these Mesofirs'

It is not necessary to analyse the contents of so well known a book as the Gramont Memoirs. They will always be committed with interest for they turn a searchlight upon the inner history. which indeed, owes the bad reputation it bears largely

The Memoirs of Sir John Recessy are the work of an accounplished man who united in himself the qualities of a courtler and panicu man was smice in ministra toe quantities or a custifur and those of a country aquire. The book contains a pleasing record of the chief events, some of them of very great importance, which the cuter events, some or stress or tery great importance, when on the notice, as well as of other matters founded on the mere gozzip of court circles. The anthor writes atomican on the nero guento oi cours curcos. Ano auture without a feeling and the result communications are noticed in must be confound that he was or enterm and a property successful to make one contensed that he was somewhat of a self-secker—indeed, he has been styled; a cautious a cautious sonownas or a sem-securer—matten, or may never asympton—a cammon time-serving politician. To those who read his pleasant narrative uno-ecrying ponucian. An unuse who read ma pressure narrative with interest, this must, however appear a hard saying. He lived with interest, this must, nowester, spipear a mark saying. As a read in a difficult period, and, although ho was whole-heartedly loyal to in a dimensi periou, anu, anisongu no was whose-nearcony myas to Charles II, he does not appear to have approved of the next sorerign, and his protestant feelings provented him from being toolyied with much regard when the recolling has combined so trousers when more regres when any termination was compressed as William III.

I Miss Habert is made to may Albel peer Mrs Diegral I may hav go away about this titles twelve ments in a south with such less home that I manual believe the

Reresby had really small reason for gratitude to Charles II, 265 since, although the king was glad to enjoy his agreeable conversa tion, and to make use of him generally all that the courtier obtained from his long attendance at court was an appointment to be high sheriff of his county to which his rank alone an approximate to se man score to the common of a city had had no sertison, and the command of a fort, which never appears to have been built!

Recesby was only 55 years of ago when he died in 1609 and it was not until 1734 that his Memory were first published, the manu script having in the interval, passed through several hands. The book was popular and screral editions of its were called for among which that of 1813 for the first time printed the author's Travels, while that of 1875 printed some of his letters, together with passeges of the diary previously omitted. It is well that the dary and the travels—both of them short works—should be united, as, together they form a connected whole, and the chronology of Receasing a life is thus completed. The scheme of his writings has a certain likeness to that of Erelyn's diary The same circumstances In the history of the country caused these two men to begin their lives with the experience of foreign travel. Recessby like Erelyn, felt that to live at home was worse than banishment, and begins

I left England in that unhappy time when becauty was reputed a crima, a max angumen in trace dimension when subjects were governors, extrants suggest superiorment arrived of anything he possessed the least actions of distinction to the late serviced commonwealth being offence stanger to transference to two more servers consucer season to an unique transfer of his artato, the only laws in force being

He took his departure in 1654, and made an extensive tour through Europe. His descriptions of France, Italy Germany and the Netherlands are valuable, and contain much information of inferrest as to the state of these countries in the seventeenth century Rereaby spent some time at Sammur (in Anjon), where there was a protestant university Here, he was able to study the French language, which he found the great resort of my countrymen to Paris prevented me from doing atthractorily there. After staying again in Paris, which he considered the finest city of Europe (not excepting London), he returned to England, in May 1638, after four years absence.

He opens his memoirs with a notice of the death of Cromwell, which, he thought, pared the way for the return of the king. This was on 23 September 1058, and, in October of the same year he was on an occupied where he made himself known to the queen was tack in rain, where no mane manages among to the value with the Palata Royal. He was well received and became very friendly with the charming princes Henricita (then fifteen years of age), who was the queen's only child living with her In 1660, hopes arose of the restoration of Charles II and we are told that now there was a greater resort to the Palets Royal than to the French court On 2 August Reresty returned to England, and he took with him a particular recommendation of the queen mother to the king. On 10 August 1000 the queen died, and Reresby describes her as a great princes and my very good mistres. It is interesting to learn that, at one time, he was attracted by to both Hamilton, and there was a chance of his marrying her although she was a catholic but, after he had seen mistress Frances Browne (to whom he was married in 1865), he had no inclination for any other whose He had probably a fortunate escape but, on the other hand, one feels that, as Ledy Reresby Elizabeth Hamilton would here, one steep to a second as a second second construction as a second second control of the second control o Philibert de Gramont.

As to these and other editions, see billiography

Roresby was not a man of letters but there is a distinction about his writings, which give us pleasure from their liveliness and freshness, indicating the insight and imparitality of a man of the world. By a careful selection of subjects he manages to furnish a good iden of the period from the restoration to the revolution. a good steel of the period from the popular plot, which shows to alloss much space to ma source on one propent proportion of the dangers to be approbabled from the rapid the supposed design, although we see that he was carly

The author carefully narrates the transactions which preceded the author carcinum marranes the transactions which precedes but he saw little of the new regime, for he died on

Among the memoir and letter writers of this period should, Allong the mentioned Sir Richard Belatrode, though, born in 1630, be He relates as infrareting streeting with James II, after the anti-complision was He plake at interesting meeting was stated 11, after the aver-comprision was convicted of purity. It was present that he was at $6 Ocean the $1th of $80 Meet. corriend of purity. It was prevent that he was at an Other the Fifth of April 1870, then he was at the White-Library invest in the Strand, where Probability, when he river he was at the White-Genre invest to the Strand, where Protestic, or the strand, where Protestic, and the stands are the death of Eing Charles the second. Remain was Overe, and other Justice agent the death of king Charter the scoons. Remay was total by James that it was fortizable for him that Other was foreign for him that Other was forced at the place of fold by these that if was pretented for how that Cates was ignorant at the place of meeting for it artically both place in the date of Text's frome at $1 Jane 5. The menting for it arterity from plane in the date of letty from all $1 Jame 2. The dieg shiel that Other being that correled, the people piet we now dead 1 to which hay need into converse one can environme, one propose four year new new needs and new it would be besided.

Sir Richard Bulitrode Henry Sidney 267

survived till 1711, when he is stated to have died 'not of old age. He served in arms in the civil war, and, as agent and envoy at the court of Brussels, under Charles II and James II, whom he followed to St Germain. His proce-writings, all of which were published posthumously include, besides Original Letters scritten to the Earl of Arlangton, in 1674, which parrate the principal events in the Low Countries and the adjoining parts of France in that year Memoirs and Reflections upon the Reign and Government of King Charles the 1st and King Charles the 2d. boildes a Life of James II stated to have been printed at Rome shortly after the author's death. The earlier of these works, which announces itself as a vindication of the characters of both Charles I and Charles II from Fanatical Aspersions, displays judgment and insight as well as loyalty If Charles I is designated the best of Hings, while of Oliver Oromwell it is asserted that 'there was certainly never a more wicked man, the former is shown to have erred in not depending on his own judgment, and the latter is credited not only with self reliance, but with 'prodictous Address. The memoir of Charles II is badly constructed, and, after a long account of the ponish plot agitation, ends with a series of diplomatic letters of secondary importance.

The Dierry of Henry Sidney (afterwards earl of Romney and lord-lieutenant of Ireland), which extends from June 1679 to January 1689, during which period the writer held the post of ambassador at the Hague and had in his hand the threads of much important negotilation, public and private, with William III of Oranga possesses no literary qualities but interspersed with it's are a number of letters to and from Sidney which add considerably communications, partly in a very necessary cipher, of the countess of Sunderland, with whom, though her bushands doings and prospects are smong her most frequent themes, he was on the very friendflest of torms. They also include letters from the dowager countess, a charming old lady whom, in her younger days, Waller had celebrated as Eacharises, and from Sir William Temple and others! The author of Gramont a Memory is severe on the difference between Henry Sidney's gifts of intellect and of figure but, both he and his favourite correspondent played an important part in drawing closer the relations which resulted in scating William of Orange on the English throne and the docurres a place among the letter writers of her age, it only for her graphic reach about the source without to our age, it omly the first seasons vignottee of Whitchall and the delays of that lade (in cipher). the double-faced duchess of Portugueth.

¹ See the edition by Biscorova, B. W. 3 vols. 1843. The Spekery Papers, Latture, and Henselial See Heats from See region of quess Mary to that of Checke III. jed. Chicke, h. 3 vols. 1746. mesists only to a small extent of letters to into a thous of last Lish and Agreeans Biblery. Those written by the lattur from school (modern the sermonovanth, he was anchoration to Dumnark and Swelton) are full of interest, especially his letters. Branch in 1997A, in one of which he gives, for the whyte of the time, a motion of observators of surchash, identified by numerals corresponding to those to a previous letter.

Lady Warwick, the wife of the fourth earl (Charles, who died in 1673), represents, among the good women of the restoration are, the paritan type proper though, at the same time, she had age, one purious type proper coolings as the same time, are time are the rery distinct individuality of her own. Lady Mary Boyle was a daughter of the first sometimes called the great earl of a manginer or one man, sometimes caused the Rican, can't Cork, and sister of Robert Boyle the natural philosopher and Roger Boyle lord Broghill (one) of Orrey). Her father's ambition Auger Doyle much vexed by her secret match with an imigindicant rounger son but the death of his clder brother made Garles Rich heir to the carldon of Warrick, to which he suc Cooded in 1659, treaty Jears after his marriage, so that she content in 1003, twenty years after an interrage, so that also became a poerces like six out of her seven sisters. Much of her married life was spect at Little Leights park in Exect (delicion Locs, as her brother Robert called it, in his dedication to her of his frontise cutilled Scraphic Lorg, written in 1648). She came from a family accustomed both to think and to write the religious a name of mind which she maintained during the whole of her frame of minut within and manifestation untill une would of the life was, no doubt, largely due to the hospitality extended by her father-in-law (the parliamentary general) to most of the by her rather-th-law (the par)minentary general) to most or the puritan ministers in England, and she ascribes her conversion to a derout life partly to the counsels of one of them, Anthony a urrous me party to the common or one or mean, anthony Walker partly to archbishop Usaher a preaching against plays, of Mahch aho saw not two after her marriage. Her husband seems which are not two after the marriage. Her minimum seems to have been a warm-hearted man, much attached to his wife and to many users a warm-market much much accepted to the war and children (on the death of his only son, he sent forth lond cries of cantoren ton the occasion of the cours was too scent town town crice of grief, though declaring that his chief softow was that the trouble gries, manager accusating than the cure source was tost the revouse would kill his wife, who was more to him than a hundred some?) but would all the suic, who was more to the habit of curring and swearing.

As in the William Tompie, we part, they tre. Community Directly Sidney one As to the William Tompie, we part, they are. Communing through strang one Controlled Julia Santarian some former of Dorothy Strang Communing through Strang Communing & Santarian Carteright, Jahn, Saskarman some despect of Dorothy Schary Omnion of Endorstone have French and Friends 1822. Other correspondents of the broken Heavy was her her Frently and Friends 1832. Other correspondents at the income Heavy were her one the cubinsted Cabert and at Senderstad (minister in secondaries table through the contract of the contract on the cubinist index art or Senderfield (minimum in secretary and fines). Hiller and Lawrence Byte (and of Radiostor), and there is a letter for the grand style from William Petts.

Diary of the Counters of Warwick 269

very often at his wife. Altogether, his treatment of her seems, notwithstending his affection, to have been wanting in kindness. Her consciousness that she 'did not remonstrate with him about his sine with sufficient faithfulness was one of the great troubles of her life a house, she felt, should be perfumed with prayers, not profaned by oaths. As to herself, solemn thoughts were never far from her in the midst of a great show in the banqueting house at Whitehall, a blast of trumpets aroused in her the thought, 'What if the trump of God should now sound, with a remembrance of the giory of which, in the days of the late king, she had been a witness in the very place whence he was to go forth to his death! Other possesses in her Diary show that religious feeling, at times, overcame her with mystic force in a prayer after an outburst with her husband, her 'soul did but breathe after God on another page, she records how abe had all that day great pleasure in thinking upon those harrow hours she enjoyed with God in the morning.

Lady Warwick's Diary reaches from July 1666 to April 1679 a further portion, extending to 1677, is now lost, though it existed about the close of the eighteenth century. The whole of it was accemible to Anthony Walker* who preached a long biographical sermon at her funeral at Felated, and published it later under the title Espara Espara. The Vertuous Woman Found, her Louis Besoailed and Character Exemplified (1685). It was annotated by lady Warwick's own domestic chaplain Thomas Woodroffe, who resided with her till the time of her death (1678). Resides this Digry she composed in the course of three days in February 1671, a short autobiography to which she subsequently made a few additions bringing down the memoir to 18741 She also left behind her a series of Occasional Meditations—the fruit of her solitary hours in the Wildernen at Leighs park, or in her chamber there or at Chelson. Meditation, says Walker was her mester place and her short returns to God, as she calls her hours of plons thought were to her the luminous points in her life. But,

³ It is rignificant of the quality of her purisantees that, to the end of her life, she never fulfol to keep 80 January as a solemn flat.
³ Author of A true Assess of the Arther of a Book called Elizio Barcheri (1921).

Author of A rise Assessed of the Arther of a Mesh called Etche Barthers (1982). Walker was John Gander's sensie at Booking, and they were both intimates in the house at hely Warselsk's father in law to whom, as well as to his son, Walher was shapsha.
B was added by Craine T. Ocofton, for the Purry Boulety in 1848. The Discrete and Occasional Mainteniers, together with some timple Rules for a Holy LV is a letter written to George Revi Berkeley was published in 1810. The whole of this material is willised with much shill in Nim Charletin Fall Resides Mery Rick, Commerce of Nierwick [1652—1879]. In Family and Friends (1905).

from an early date, she was also in the habit of expressing her thoughts in the form of apophthegus intended to have an effect upon others, and formulating what might be called witty religious spon country, and to institutioning whose magne to control wave, consumers, with which she fell into the helds of winding up her discourse. They were something in the manner of the Possess of Pascal and aimliker collections, chiefly by French writers, with none of which she can have been acquainted when she set about this style of composition moreover Mas Pell Smith has discovered that the compleasement moreover sizes sent cumus uses uncovered was use assumple actually followed by lady Warwick was the Occasional Mediations of bahop Joseph Hall, of which a third edition appeared in 1632. Altogether her epigrammatic thoughts number nearly two in 1002. Amegener wer epigramment through manner nearly two centuries (183), being unereally distributed over the years in which they were set down (1663—78). The true measure of loving God tally a to the town (1000-/o). The true measure or toring our left from the measure is one of them another (actuely original) Why are we so feed of that life which begins with a cry and ends with a groan! Many are suggested by the arperioce. and mus while a groun, along are suggested by any capersonal or any capersonal form the trivial incidents—of every day life upon feeding the poor at the gate upon children playing, and then questioning upon the upon children playing, and then questioning upon the playing and then questioning upon the playing and then question upon the playing and the question upon the question upon the playing and the question upon the question upo not as too gate upon entured playing, and then quarrelling to dress myself upon my looking in a looking-gites in the morning of the myself upon my taking a great deal of pains to make a the others arise out of events of deep between or heres or mares as no others arise out of events of deep personal interest such as her husband's death, and her own impending farerall to her lored nor nunceura a contact, and not own improving marketin to not rotate.

But all are characterized by the combination (*) country name. Our su are consucresco by the communate and interary intendity which was her note.

Though the Hemotra of Lady Fanshage remained supullished 10 full till 1820/30 they challenge comparison both as to the in an an assume mer comparation will as to the high spirit informing them. interest of their matter said as to too migh spars unforming them, and also as to clearness and viracity of style, with any memoirs of and also as to creations and vivacity or as jo, with any memoirs of the ago to which they belong—including, as has been Josely and, the age to writer they becong meaning, as has oven justly and, even those of Mrs Hutchinson. Unlike Levy Apoley Am Harrison eren inese et sire literaniscot. Unitate tatej aparej atm marrison was, according to ber own account, a hoyding girl in ber jouth, was according to her own account, a noyung gur in our young though we may well believe her assertention that abe was never though we may sen occurs not association that any was noter immodest but skipping. Her mother's death awakened the serious induouse out saispans. Asse mounts a occasi a maximo une serious side of her nature, which, henceforth, in the great crises of her life. aloo or ner nature, which, hence for it, in the given crime or ner inc aboved likeli forth in words of almost impossioned prayer—ordi anower ment occur in words to amount impossioned prayer—ordinarily however in deeds rather than in words. The first sixteen narily nowever in occus rating than in worth ine first statem years of her married life (from 1644) were a period of incommit Jenus of ner married into (from 1014) were a period of incommits alruggle and sacrifice through which she passed with unfalling and, at times, heroic courage. Sacrifice for the sake of the royal cause at times, nerote courage. Onerines for the same of the royal cause all the ladge of her husbands at well at of much many which were closely connected with one another or reckoned their revenues engaged and sequestered for the crown in the time of the late rebellion at near eighty thousand nounds a year Nothing could be more stirring than the personal courage which she displayed by her husband a side-as when she crevi to his side on deck, dispulsed in a cabin boy a 'thrum-cap and tarred cost, while their ship was facing the approach of a Turk's man of war or when night after night, she stood beneath his prison window on the bowling green at Whitehall. Nor could any devotion have surpassed that which she showed to him during his lone absences in the king a service-including the perpetration of a most ingenious forgery of a pass to Calais for herself and her children. All these things she tells in a style of delightful directness and freshness, and the interest of the narrative (which is diversified by one or two thrilling ghost stories) only slackens (as is common in biographies) when prosperous times at last came to her husband and herself with the restoration. It was, to be sure, a modified prosperity owing to the king's way of keeping his promises (of which she says very little) and to Clarendon's real or supposed malice (of which she says a good deal). After serving as ambassador in both Portugal and Spain, concerning which country his lady has many favourable particulars to relate, Sir Richard Fanshawe died at Madrid, shortly after receiving his recall (1660) his widow had to bring his body to England and there live for the survivors among her many children, as she had lived for him whose story she set down for the benefit of his heir's

In this great districts I had no remorb test pathence. Notifies did those electromatences following present to most of my conditions; much test found I that companion I expected upon the rive of great! that had but at once my hashead and offertree in thin, with my som of but twarte months slid in my arms, four daughters, the class but thirteen years of age, with the body of my done bushead daily in my agist for sear at months trayether and a distressed family all to be by me in honour and homesty provided for; and do trawed family all to be by me in honour and homesty provided for; and of the most of the my man and the man and the my man and man and me and bely may and howegit my soul sect trayth. But the did have and see and bely my and howegit my soul sect of trayible.

¹ The directations of Sir Bishard Number's result from Spain are discussed at length to the voluntaers and whashis seems to the official of the Minners of Jam Lody Prankers printing the notation of the New York of the State of the State of the State of the Lody Prankers printing the 150° by a Secondard. Lody Prankers printing to see a next of surge Henry and State of State of the New York of the State of State of the State of State of State of the State of State of the State of State

The Letters of Rackel Lady Russell, the devoted widow as a had been the falthful wife, of William lord Russell, virtually begin with the death of her husband (of whose last paper delirered to with the scaffold, a letter to king Charles II vindicates the gentineness) and with that of her only son, Wriothesley duke of Bedford. She surrived him and her daughter the duchess of or reasonate the start rest time and nor usualized are uncursed or fixed a few months later) for twelve year, retaining to the last the clearness of mind and screnity of spirit which are to me has the occarious or third and setting or spatic which see characteristic of all her writing. Through all her troubles, she properted a keen interest in public affairs, as well as in the extensive business of her private estate. Her chief correspond ents were divines, more especially her father's chaplain and her own tator John Fitzwilliam, whom she committed on all subject together with Burnet and Tillotson but she was also in frequen executer with leading statemen and ladies of high rank ther tone throughout is that of a self possession at the some time the tone introduced a time of a son possession as the same one derout and reasonable, to which the even calm of her style corresponds. She is not however without moments of writh as corresponds. One is not, however without moments of principles and as of tendermon, the former being on occasion, directed rent as or temerness one normer being on occasion, unrecent against the archive of civil and religious liberty both within and Against the arcanoe or earn and rengions mostly own armin and beyond his dominions—Louis VIV She died in 1723, in her ospout ms usuamous—name it; one uso m 1/20, m no-cighty-sorenth year. Her Letters were first published in 1773.

Although small in bulk, the Memoirs of Queen Mary II Although annu in tous, no account w Years wary 11 published in 1886 from the Hanover archives, and extending from parameter in 1000 from one trainers accurate, and extensions from facility the beginning of her reign to the year before that of h nearly the beginning or ner reign to the year betwee that or n death, should not be overlooked. No reasonable doubt as to the scent, amount not be overshown. No responsive dones as to the gentiliberees can remain, if they are compared with the autobic genunceress can remain, a trey are compared with the automore traphical fragments given to the world by countess Bentinck in graphical influences gives to the most of counters of the good queen. tent and with the mempionary genuine servers of the good queen.
Written in English, while the fragment of 1820 was in French (sho Firsten in Leagues, while the straightful of their mas in a rence (see possessed both languages, as well as Dutch), they were guarded possessed boun magnages, as went as Duning they were guarded with great care by the writer who, in 1691 burnt nearly the whole with great care by the writer who, in 1991 course nearly the whose of the meditations which, according to the custom of her day ot the meditations wasco, according to the custom of her day she also indited. Her record of often trying experiences attests are any manufactured and her seems of duty uplied by a deep piety her minate mousely and her seems of dusy upwers by a deep prop-which was at all times ready to translate itself into good works. which are an amount reasy to transacte these must good work. The story of the anxious years of her reign, which is further and many or the anxious years of her reign, which is further that a short series of letters from her hand, is full of

CHAPTER XI

PLATONISTS AND LATITUDINARIANS

Ir was apparently, after a short whit to Cambridge, in 1863. nat Gilbert Burnet, in his History of my Own Times after escribing the degeneracy of the episcopal order which followed pon the failure of the Savoy conference-proceeded to declare hat the English church herself would have quite lost her exteem ver the nation had it not been for the appearance of a new set I men of another stamp at that crisis. These, he goes on to ay 'were generally of Cambridge, formed under some divines he chief of whom were Dra Whitcheote, Cudworth, Wilking, More and Worthington. And passing on to a brief characterisation of such he describes Whicheste as much for liberty of conscience. and one who, being disgusted with the dry systematical ways of those thues, studied to raise those who conversed with him to a nobler set of thoughts, and, with this aim, set young students such on reading the ancient philosophers, chiefly Plata Tolly and Plotin, and on considering the Christian religion as a doctrine sent from God both to elevate and sweeten human nature. reassage, while it supplies additional evidence of Burnet's habitual sympathy with whatever was enlightened in conception and generous in sentiment, affords, at the same time, another instance of what Macaulay, in his shrewd estimate of his distinguished countryman, describes as his 'propensity to bimder The Cam bridge Platonists, as they are often termed, although generally inclined to latitudinarianism, appear to have had their origin independently of the latter movement, and Whichcotes claim to rank as one of their number must be pronounced as at least doubtful but of latitudinarianism itself he is one of the earliest examples and certainly the most complexous. As regards his philosophy if such it may be termed, it was that of Bacon, while his distinctive religious belief was largely the outcome of his own observation and personal convictions, and continued to survive

Platonists and Latitudinarians

274 long after the Platonic school with which his name is associated

A member of a good Europahire family Benjamin Whichcote colored as a possioner at Emmanuel college in October 1830 but where he received his previous education is not recorded. In autro ine recurred me provides contents as his blographer the state of the number rank, and character of this pupils, and the care he took of them. Two years later he was appointed afternoon lecturer at Trinity church, Cambridge, an office which he continued to hold for twenty years from the time, that is to may when Laud's administration of coclorastical affilirs was at its height to that of Cromwell's Proclamation, whereby equal and complete religious freedom was established throughout the realm—those malcontents alone being excepted whose opinions were arowedly and manifestly prejudicial to the whose opinions are arowedly and manneaut partitions of the great mensure, Whichcote, together with Oudworth and others of his number of the capetially consulted by Cromwell as to the capetiency pany was especially communed by recommend as we are especially of extending toleration to the Jone. In his discourse at Trinity or extending tournation to use work at the travourses as arming church, he had made it his chief object, his biographer tells us to counterect the familie entiretisem and senseless cauting then in connection to which the term outlinites must be understood in its original sense, as implying the assumption by any individual whether educated or anoducated of the right to any mentions, whether concases or unconstant, or the right to interpret, at the user concerns, not merest one meaning or Scripture, but, also, to decide upon its applicability to existinoctivate, out was, to occase upon its apparaments to transmissions conditions, in short, to be himself inspired and rengrous commercias, in anoth to to mission impured.

In 1044 Whichcote was installed by Manchester in the provost.

alip of King a college, where he was able to exercise a marked sup or range community differing considerably from Emmanuel, influence over a community outering communitary non-communita-and, at the same time, bimself to assume a more independent tone. and at the scalamic year 1650—1 he was elected to the office of in the actuality year toology, to were entropy to the outer to rechancellor and his commencement oration, delivered in that socialistic and me commencement recovery resistance of extraorion mylich involved him in a noteworthy correspondence with Tuckney which interest and it a noteworked correspondence with automorphia former inter at Emmanuel. Tuckney with other seniors of the university had been in the habit of attending the afternoon lectures at Trinity church, and their apprehensions were already excited by what they had there heard. Whichcote, as Tuckney excited by what they had under ments. Whenever, as the supported that all those things wherein good mornious may not be determined from Scripture, insumers as Scripture Itself in some places seems to be for the one and

and in some other places for the other which, says his critic. 'I take to be unsafe and unsound. Still 'more dangerous, as it appeared to him, had been the advice given by the preacher that Christians, when seeking a common ground of agreement, should be willing to restrict the language of bellef solely to Scripture words and expressions, and 'not pross other forms of words, which are from fallible men. Christ by his blood. wrote Tuckney who discerned the drift of such a limitation, never intended to purchase such a peace, in which the most orthodox, with Panista Ariana Socialisms and all the worst of heretiques. must be all put in a bag together. To this, Whichcote a rejoicder (had be thereupon expressed his whole mind) would, doubtless, have been that as he himself lave it down in his Anhorisms. Determinations berond Scripture have indeed enlarged faith. but lessened charity and multiplied divisions. In the first instance. however be contented himself with a purely defensive affirmation of his view-namely, that the devout Christian was entitled to advance as his own individual conviction, whatever 'upon search he finds cause to believe, and whereon he will venture his own appl. In his next letter bowever, he made hold to swert his position in the following pregnant terms 'Truth is truth, whosoever has moken it, or howsoever it hath been abused but if this liberty may not be allowed to the university, wherefore do we study! We have nothing to do, but to get good memories, and to learn by beart.

There can be little doubt that his equable nature was at this time being roused to unwented indignation, as he marked the unsparing severity with which, in 1851, the Engagement was being pressed home throughout the university and especially at King a college, by the presbyterian party and, before his correspondence with Tuckney closed, we find him roundly denouncing those 'who indeed profess some scal, for that happie point, of justification by faith, but yet are sensible degeocated into the derillah nature of malice, spite, furle, envie, revenge. His final words to Tuckney, contained in a short letter, written in the after part of the day on which he laid down his office of vice-chancellor, are as follows like wherein I fall short of your expectation, I fail for traths sake, whereto almos I acknowledge mayel addition.

The difficulties in which the broadminded provest of King's thus found himself involved were precisely those which Baccon, to some extent, had succeeded in crading, by his candid around, that he considered all articles of fulth to lie beyond the province of his new method of induction—although, indeed, his personal or me now mounts of manufacture measurements managed in parameters were so far surmised by others that he did not occupe the menylable imputation of being the real author of the notorious Caristias Paradores. Whichoote, however determined otherwise Firmly convinced of the truth of Christianity and fully persuade. in his own mind that its principles—wherever accepted in their as the subscribed to in the letter-were capable of conferring priocices benefits on mankind, he argued that the more countries process contains on measure, so a government of the greater would be the mental assurance they would carry with them. And, towards the bringing about of such an understanding, he held the inductive method to be eminently favourable, and calculated to prove as effectual in allaying theological contention as it had been in the hands of Gailleo, in proving beyond dispute the rotation of the earth on its own aris, or in the hands of Harrey in demonstrating the circulation of the blood. But, in those cases where there were differences of opinion with respect to interpretation, be advised the suproation of degmatter. We must not be was board to say put Truth organisation. No unions not, no was notify to say put transfer the place of a Means, but into the place of an End! holding that, even if the end seemed unattainable, the path pursued was not necessarily the wrong one.

Another passage in the above-mentioned correspondence, which occurs in Tuckney's second letter must not be left un wances occurs an Assessing a second rever man use we see an noticed. He had been discussing Whichcote's discourses with other seniors of the university and writes to the following effect

Some are readle to think that your great authors, you steer your course by are Dr. Field, Dr. Jackson, Dr. Hammond,—all there way leave your course by Hammond,—all these very learned one, the are Dr Fried, Dr Jackson, Dr Hawmono,—all three very learned men, the middle sofficiently abscure; and both he and the last, I must need think too mixels anniversity execute; and took he and the last, I must beed think too COPPORT. Whilst you were follow here you were cost taite the companie of way beared man, who, I fear—at frast some of them,—stalled other authors. vary learned mea, who, I four_mai least some of them_metadised other authors more than the Reviptures, and P.1470 and his schedure, above others; in more than the recipions and given and are sensoring soons street; it was an examinary soons street; it was not been and acknowledge, from the little being it have into them. wrom, I man arrest access reagy total and state tomas a many into the finds panis excellent and diffus expressions; and as we are wond more to finds panie exercise; and diffus expressions; and as we are wont more it.

like is and wooder at a parrel, preaking a few word, then a sun, that fixed is and wonder at a parror, speciating a lew words, then a man, that special manie more and more plaining to, whilster we find such promote is such speaks manie more and more piataties so, whitset we find such german is such disapillis (where we least expected them), and hope some such drive things draghina (where we seem expected them), and hear some such drive things them, we here been too much drawn away with admiration of them, from them, we have been too more drawn away with admiration or them.

And hence, in part, both run a value of doctrine which direct very able and And notice, in part, nate run a veine or doctrine which direct very said and worldy men, whose from my heart I stack homour are, I four foo much worthy sea, whose from my hear I such honour are I fear too much known by the power of Astara in moral, the mark adjacent process to the contract of the contr Anorem by the power of nature in morning the many normal nature of many nature of Falth, a rette ratio much talked of which I cannot tell where to find?

The drift of the above passage is unmistakable. Tackney bollored that Whichcode, when at Emmanuel, had come under the influence of certain students and admirers of Plato, not that he had influenced them had he done so, indeed, it is difficult to understand how the fact could have failed to attract the notice of his former intor and the latter have omitted to make any reference to the same in the above controversy. As it is, his conjectures may be said to be fairly disposed of by Whichcote s reply, in which he complains that Tuckney is under a complete missoprehension it was true, indeed, he admits, that he had once read the treatise, Of the Church, by Richard Field (an Oxford divine much admired by James I), but that was ten years ago while as regarded Thomas Jackson, a former precident of Cornus Christi college, and Henry Hammond of Magdalen college, in the same university a former chaplain of Charles L chiefly known as the anthor of A Practical Calecham, he save, I have a little looked into them here and there, a good while since, but have not read the hundredth part of either of them.

^{*} Eipie Lotion p. 88.

"Trails," he goes as to say I shame superife to tell you, how thile I here hear acquainted with booking while fellow of Ermannan Celledge, superparent with people took my time from sea. I have not read mante books, but I have startled a fewery medication and invention leads his rather my fifth that reading, and trulk I have more read Cabrin, Peridas, and Barn, than all the books, authors, or names you mention. I have alreade expected reason, for what nor says; her valuing prevents or extheticle, it the stating and resolving of trulks and therefore have read them more where I have found (if "

If, to this explicit statement, we add the internal evidence supplied by Whichcote's own manuscript notes of the Aphoritans and the Sermons (neither of which was published until after his death), the theory which numbers him among the Platonists, and would even recognise him as their leader would seem to be altogether inadmissible. Neither Plate nor Plotinus finds a place among his cited authorities, while the latter is not even mentioned -although, in addition to the Greek text of the New Testament. be quotes both Aristotle and Origen and, among Latin writers. Lucretius and Marcus Antonious. But mysticism and recondite philosophy were foreign to his genius and the divine with whom he was in fullest sympathy, after the restoration, was probably John Wilkins of Oxford, who, after soquiring eminence by his labours as a teacher at Wadham college, was also, for rather less than a twelvemonth, master of Trinity college, Cambridge. Wilkins was further distinguished by the interest with which he regarded the acientific investigations of the Royal Society and his toleration in dealing with dimenters. The evidence, accordingly, 278 would lead us to conclude that the statement of Burnet, in his History—which, it is to be borne in mind, was not published until creating as as we so so some in many was not promised units eight years after his death—was simply the inaccurate impression derived by a young man of twenty during a hurried visit to the periors by a joing man or swelly uniting a marrier value to use mily and not placed on record until long after while it is correlate that he says about Plato, Telly and Plottn, is perfectly applicable to Henry More of Christs college, who was Whichcotes innier by only four years and, about the time of Burnets visit, at the height of his reputation.

It would seem, however that even More is not to be regarded as the originator of the Platonist movement at Cambridge. So carly as the Jear 1641, there had appeared printed at the carry as not year tour, more man appeared, primed as me University Press, a collection of Commonplaces' delivered in the chapel of Trinity college, by John Sherman, a fellow of the society aspen or armity coness, or some consumary a rouns or an armity and bachelor of divinity in which the following noteworthy scriences occur

Rainry's light is a subcoloring star in the orb of the microscener Gad's Materal light is a subcolectful play in the ord of the microscency (lock, Mary subser in the school of the world, As truths supernatural see Yors, many times in the school of the world. As irvibe supernatural are not confrolleted by reason, so neither sayaly is that controlleted by Seriphare

Libror post how it someth to pass, but toe many Caristians have too much A ROOM DOE NOW IS COMMAND TO PRESS, DOES NOW TO SERVICE MATERIAL REPORT TO MAKE A PROPORTION OF THE PROPERTY COMMAND AS THE PROPERTY OF THE PR or transfer term and on each in a resuprocession, some sequence of that which seemeth correspondent rate secret Scripture! that when nominal contrapolations to be nearly conspicuous.

The (naches of the Graffles instructed in Cartesians not to discontrate to the contract of the Cartesians not to discontract the cartesians not the cart

The Inches of the Untiller Instructed to the United and to disconstruct to the Inches of any Profession and Plate's rule is good—Offic, Alld rf. Let all the Confession who saith, so what is said; who doub, so what is

The abore quotations may be said both to indicate the point beyond which Whichcote and his followers are to be regarded as making a distinct advance upon the Baconian philosophy by as meaning a viewing outsing upon the recognition of Christian dectrine as in harmony with the rotes of nature and, further by the acceptance of pagan philosophy as on matter and, surface to both while the author's references to Aristotle as maintaining the theory of the immortality of the so of (p. 75), and his belief in the indebtedness of Pythaguras. Triangust and Plate to Scripture (p. 30), afford almost equally armore and risto to expense the one more almost equal, and property of an intimacy with Henry More. The title of therman s rolume, A Greek is the Temple, suffices to indicate or overcome rounners a circue to the Leafunce to marrows that his appeal is from the traditions of the Leafunchurch to that test are appear to from which he, and those with whom he was in sympathy derived much of their inspiration and it is at least open to question, as he was slightly Whichcote a scalar in academic status, whether his published Commonplaces may not have conributed, to a far greater degree than is on record, to promote the movement the origin of which has been generally attributed, almost exclusively to the (as yet unprinted) discourses of the movement of King s.

provest of King a The second som of a sentleman of fair estate at Grantham, the genius of Henry More ran counter alike to parental admonitions and to the bias which his home education was designed to impart, for his father was a rigid Calvinist. He tells us however that the latter would aften in winter evenings read aloud Spenser's Pueris Queens to his elder brother and himself while, in his conversations with the two lads, he frequently commended philosorby and learning. At the ago of 14 Henry was sent to Bton-for the perfecting of the Greek and Latin tongue, as Richard Ward, his blographer, tells us who also states that the hove master would, at times he in admiration at his exercises. Such language, in relation to the Eton of the seventeenth century. can only be interpreted as implying a special facility in Latin verse composition, varied, occasionally, by translations from Latin authors, and may be recarded as affording an explanation of the fact of Mores superlarity as a classical acholor over the rest of the Platonists , when in advanced years, he turned this to account by translating his English treatises into Latin, fundly anticipating that they were destined to as wide a popularity on the continent as they had met with in England. From Eton, he went up to Cambridge, where, in his seventeenth your, he was admitted a pensioner of Christ's college. This was in December 1631 and it was in the following July that John Militon, having proceeded M.A. finally quitted Cambridge. Brief as was the period of their Joint residence in college, More can hardly fall to have heard a good deal of his illustrious compeer, as one of the most notable students of the society, and already famed as the writer of some expentionally clever occasional verses but whether they became personally acquainted must be considered doubtful. During the next onarter of a century, however Christa college became distinguished by the enthusiasm with which some of its fellows embraced the doctrines of Descartes and, in 1654, the colebrated Ralph Cudworth was elected master of the society More himself. who was three years Cudworth a senior, succeeded, in due course, both to a fellowship and a tutorship, and continued to reside in

28₀ Platonists and Latitudinarians

college to his death. His pupils, says Ward, much admired the excellent lectures he would deliver to them, of Piety and Instruction, from the chapter that was read on nights in his chamber his scalars recognised the raise of the crample be set, by his regular attendance at chapel and at the publick ordinances of the church while the persistent refusals with which he put saide all offers of preferment desired the criticism of those who might an outer or presented oversing the movering beauty of belt or phace in the wider world without. Ultimately however he became pane in the wines were animous vicinities in vicinities and an ascette although he fully understood the benefit of exercise and the fresh air and paid particular attention to his diet and, as a fish diet did not mit his conattention to use ure are are use use use use seen use constitution, he, during Lent, often dined in his own chamber When no longer occupied as a tutor the monotomy of his life was rolisted, to some extent, by visits to the country sent of one of his farmer pupils, Edward, viscount Coursey Ragley retired from the ordinary hamits of men, with its woods and shady walks, was an ideal retreat for one of More a highly imaginative temperament and in its recesses, he tells us, the cholcest theories of one of his most poterorthy treatises, that entitled The Immortality of the Sond, were conceived. Lady Convay also became his pupil of whom his biographer gives us the following account

She was of locomparable parts and endowments, and letteres this excellent person and the Doctor there was, from first to last, 4 try life to the control of excellent person and the fronce there was, from street to her, a very agent friendship; and I have beard him may that he source ever next with any friendship; and I have beard him my that he source ever more with any Derson (outs or weemen) of better natural parts than the lady Corney Else person (man or weeken) or better matter pure team the may torsety ones had, so all accounts, an extraordinary Palse and respect for the Doctor -I had, so all accounts, as extraordinary raise and respect for the Boctor—

see abundance of letters that are festimonies of it. And as also has a seen abundance or writers that are restrictions of it. And as and always wrote a very clear riple, so would also degree accordingly on the latest and well-best according to white the control of t

On his father's death, More found himself in fairly affinent On me names a ocaus, more round masser in namy amount circumstances, and, when writing to lady Coursey on one occation, he observes, that it is the best result of riches, that canon, no ourselves already well provided for we may be fully matters of our own time. Notwithstanding bowerer his ample tensiers of our our came. Atous measuring sourcer an ample keining, it is undenlable that a certain precipitancy in pronouncing scaure, it is uncommon that a crystal precipitaticy in pronouncing judgment was one of his most serious defects, and one which offers a marked contrast to the habitual deliberation of Cod worth, which a maje kelf in tim, perhaps carried to excess. Another point of was men in turn, persays carried to excess another point to difference between the master of Christ's and its distinguished concrete occared to the fact that the former was not a public school man. Cudworth had been educated at home by his father in-law, Dr Stoughton, and had been admitted a penaloner of Emmanuel at the age of thirteen. It is probable, therefore, that he never attained to the facility in Latin, either colloquially or in composition, which More appears to have accurred at Eton and he consequently preferred to write in English.

Throughout his life, moreover he was much busied with official duties. In 1845 when only twenty-eight years of age, be had been elected master of Clare, besides being appointed to fill the chair of Hebrew in the university, and, on migrating, in 1654. from Clare to assume the masterably of Christ's college, he found himself called upon to undertake the office of bursar he was also a frequent preacher Notwithstanding therefore, his regutation both for learning and ability his labure was scenty and mainly bestowed on Hebrew and cognate studies. But Cadworth was intimate with Whichcote, and, in their frequent conversations, could hardly fail to become familiar with the views of the latter on the subject of morality The moral part of religion. Whicheote was wont to my 'Is the knowledge of the Divine Nature, and it never alters. Moral laws are laws of themselves, without sanction of will, for the necessity of them arises from the things themselves! Codworth, in the course of his varied reading, and especially in connection with the literature of the Cabala, had met with evidence which appeared to him atrongly corroborative of such a theory and he had intimated to his friends his design of nublishing, before long, a treatise entitled Moral Good or Evil. or Natural Ethics. It was a subject, however which demanded not only very wide research, but, also, that careful suspension of indement which he was wont to exercise in arriving at his conclusions and his friends were already beginning to entertain missivings whether his profound speculations would ever result in actual accomplishment, when he was himself taken by surprise. and not a little ruffled, on learning that Henry More, living within the precincts of Christ's college, was about to publish a manual on the same subject, and this, too in Letin, thereby appealing to a wider circle of readers than any English philosophical treatise could possibly command! The master was naturally inclined to surmise that some at least of the views which he had formed on the subject and had often talked over with his friends had been appropriated by More. He protested warmly against such apparently disingencous conduct, in a letter to Worthington-formerly master of Jerus college and their common friend—and, through his intervention, More was induced to process his per through me measurement, must see mousee to proceed in por forth abould have put forth too willingness to was times communications amount more pursuant to bis own elaborate disquisitions. But publication, so far as the master was concerned, was still remote and eventually Mores master was chicken made its appearance in 1667. It was in Constitution and (as described by the author bimself) merely a portable little rolume, designed for the instruction of beginners, and must rounner, unsequent for our manufaction or beginners, and Ethics, so as to render the methods of the recognised teachers on the subject more easily intelligible Codworth a profound on the subject time of occupy investigation of the property of the concerning Elernal and Installable Herally on the other hand, remained in manuscript for another sixty four years, other many remained in manuscrape for another stary four years, when long after the author's death—it at last appeared under the editorable of Edward Chandler the loamed bishop of Durham.

I Aphorisms, comit is the Sile comit may be. Ell.

But, long before Enchrideon Ethicaen appeared, More was Due point octore and as completions for his daring arrowy a renominous answer and as excessfuctions for the starting as was the master for his caution. Taking for his maxim the as was the master for an execution results for the maximum on the cooper description and the cooper description of Cloro-rationers gave as see cooper description. section sectioned to circumstances was et me conque autres, section to counteract alike the expericism hatched in Paris and the enthretism rampant in scepticism nations in tars and the communication companies in Rotterdam, the Carlatian teacher should call in the aid both of novertiam, the variation seasons should call in the aid note of the pagen philosopher of the past and of the scientific philosopher of the present. But nothing, he held, could be of wome angury or any present. Due to the control of the Christian faith than that its recognised expounders should tor the currentlying to the support of what the roce of reason had to seem ranging to the support of some the continue of the con temporarizates to be america to early accordingly as toy in this Song of the Soul he had openly conferred himself the disciple na comp et one com un man openit contenno intensit une uneque of Plato and Plotinus, as restorers of oriental traditions of a remote of riate and riouses, as resources or oriented traditions of and probably implied philosophy boldly proclaiming that if what a consociat to Plato's school (Lypicy asil states app journed Lithwise was Explian Trimegiet, and the antique roll LEOPERS A PROPERTY, and in manager rout Of Chaldre windows all which time bath tore But Pade and deep Piotia do restore) Which is my scope, I sing out leatily; If any critica me for such strange lots, And me all biameions, brand with inferry ded purge that man from fault of four malignity?

Although, consequently the fate of Galileo was atill a warning to the scientific world, the poets conviction that the Ptolemaic theory was destined ultimately to give place to the Copernican was no less candidly expressed. After spostrophising those

283

Blest evals first authors of Astronomial Who clomb the beavers with your high reaching mind, Scaled the high battlements of the lefty akle, To whom compared this earth a point you find, he proceeds to compare their assallants to those fabled Giants, who, piling Pelion upon Ossa, themselves, in turn, strove, with raging wind, 'to clamber up to heaven.

But all in vain, they want the laward skill.
What comes from heaven only can there sevend.
Not rays are tempest that this bulk doth fill
Gen profit anght; but greatly to attend
The soul's still working patiently to bend
Our mind to skilling reason, and clear light
That strangely figer'd in our soul doth wond,
Shifting its forms, still playing in our sight,
TIII something it present that we shall take for right-

And, finally the following rebuke of the persecutors of Galileo probably went home to the consciences of not a few readers who were still, perhaps, healtating to express their open assent

O you stiff-danders for ag'il Ptolemes,
I heartily praise your humble reservoes
II willingly gives to Antiquitie;
But when of him's in whom's your confidence,
Or your own reason and experience
In those exase arts, you find these things are true
Than unterly spungue our contract exam,
Then are you forded to exar to but actives,
Not what your rease gamespee to helden springlet untrue?

The Song of the Soul (the poem from which the above extracts are taken) is in five books, each prefaced by an 'Address to the Reader, wherein the author discusses, in plainer prose, that plane of his subject with which the book Itself is especially concerned, thus successively dealing, though very irrefully, with those several problems which suggest themselves in connection with the theory of the soul's independent existence—its life, immortality, sleep, unity and (in opposition to the theory of the fabled Lethe) Its memory after death.

Taken as a whole, Mores poem is entitled to the praise of being a highly ingenious series of arguments, adorned by fancy and clothed in poetlo diction, in support of his several theories. When compared with the Psyche of Joseph Beaumont, which appeared in the following year it must be pronounced altogether appeared in sice tonowing your is must be pronounced anogener and, in fact, the difference between the two composuperior and in sect, the uncreased to we can use two comparison is almost impossible. Beaumont was a notire of Hadloigh in Suffolk and had received his education at the grammar school in that town. He subsequently entered at Peterhome, Cambridge, where he gained a fellowable, from which he was ejected in 1844 On his ejection, he retired to Hadleigh, where, for the avoiding of mere idleness, and being without the society of books, as he himself talls us he began the composition of his poems—an endeavour to represent a soule led by Divine Grace and her Guardian Angel through the assume on an extension of line, pride, hereale, and persocution. This singular production, conceived in initation of Spensor but written in the six-line stance, extends to innertor or opener on writing in the six-ino states, cavenus to twenty cantos, or some thirty thousand lines, and although it is said to have been commended by Pope, produces in the modern reader the olse than wonderment. Even the author's son (himself a fellow of Peterhouse), when re-editing it for the press in 1702, deemed it so far capable of improvement that he left hardly a stanza mailtared. Genius itself, indeed in complying to depict the career of a pure and derout mature, and employing to unputs the curver to a pure and normal matter, and of a corry stage by temptations designed to effect the ruin alike of its curthly and of tempronous usageou to eners are rum water or us current sou or its spiritual happiness, might well fall in the attempt to impart variety to the increasant recurrence of doletal circumstance or rance, to see maximum recurrence or outcome circumstance or impending perfil. But Beaumout was neither an Edmund Spenser mproduce peris. Due recuments was returner as commun operator of a century nor a soun nonron and one one of a quarter of a contary later be wrote The Pilprims Progress, may unhesitatingly be later no wrote the Functions Frontier, may unnesseatingly or acquitted of having borrowed anything from the pages of Psycks. acquitted of mixing contrared anything then the pages of fraces. For readers have ever felt disposed to nod over Bunyans master For resours many ever tens unspects so not over trumpants master pieces, while Beaumont's peem belongs very much to that order of pace, which induces the alamber not infelicitorally described by its author in the following stanza

¹ Gabien.

Philosophical Paras, pp. 161-6.

284 Platonists and Latituainarians

In this soft calm, when all alone the Heart In this soil caim, were all alone the Heart Walks through the shades of its own aftern Breast, i) alta taronga tae acasan to its own some Hearen taken delight to meet it, and impart Those blessed Thicse, which poss the best Of waking one, whose brans torn all to night Defore the looks of a spiritual nighti

If, however Benumont cannot be numbered among those poets of it nowerer neumons cannot be unastered month those frees in whom Cambridge is proud be una a master to whom Peterbono whom tamorroge is proud, no was a master to whom retermouse has reason to be grateful. He was not only a pulnful regim pronas remon to to gracina. He was not only a parameter regime pro-fessor of divinity but he also approved himself an industrious and careful guardian of the college archives, which he reduced to order, indexing the register of admissions, and compiling a volume of personal memoranda useful as illustrating the college life of the period.

In the mountime, Henry More was acquiring a brilliant reputs tion by his untiring literary activity, and, in 1052, brought out his Authors against Atheren. In the following year appeared his Conjectura Cabbalistica, and, in 1850, his Enthusiasmus Triumphotos a skilful exposure of the pretensions of the enthusiasm which was then at its apogee. In 1659 he re-wrote, in an ex randed and connected form, the dissertations prefixed to the several books of his Song of the Soul, and, along with the argu ment of The Song itself, reduced to plainer proce, published his treatise entitled The Immortality of the Bond. In 1660 amenred his Grand Mustery of Godliness, which Beaumont was Improvedent enough to take upon himself to criticise. The procesic poet was incapable of appreciating the poetic philosopher and blundered sadly The underlying design of Mores treatise would appear indeed to have been unintelligible to him, and his attack recolled disastronaly on himself. In 1662, More published a collected edition of his prose works up to that date, including his correspondence with Descurtes. It is in the preface to this volume that More appears at his best, still adhering to his original stand point, when he asks, what greater satisfaction can there be to a rational spirit than to find himself able to appeal to the strictest rules of reason and philosophy?

I conceive, he goes on to my the Christian religion retisand throughout, and error priest should endeavour, according to his opportunity and expectly to be also, as much as he can, a rational man or patioscopier, for which resear, excitainly Universities were first ervoict, and are still continued to this very day. for take away reason, and all wellings are all he true; as, the Bakh being removed, all billions are of one calcors!

It is here, also, that he refers to the service which he had rendered in interweaving Platonism and Cartesianism— making use of these Hypotheses as invincible bulwarks against the most cuming and most mischievous efforts of Atheism*—this, it is to be noted, being the last occusion on which he allindes with complacement to the doctrines of Descartes.

After the collapse of the Savoy conference, however his avowed sentiments and whole tone (in common with those of not a few other writers) underwent a radical change. Worthington suggested to him to throw over Cortesianiam, and he did so-his Encharadion Metaphysicus, which appeared in 1668, being especially designed as an exposition of a science of spiritualism, in opposition to the

286

In 1004, his Mystery of Inspecty aroused afresh the public interest in past history by its denunciation of the ciaims of popery while it also excited gloomy forebodings as regarded the future, by its discussions on the fulfillments of prophecy under the reign by its uncommon on two immunicates to property under two rough of anti-Christ. The interest aroused by these arbitrary interprets. tions of past historical events was further stimulated by his tons to have measurement events was surface summarcor by ma-returning to the subject in his Dirfus Dialogues, published in loog, the most popular of all his works. Here, in the fifth notes the took upon himself to point out that the occurrence of the calamities which the soundings of the six trumpets in The on the commutator which the seminatings of the fax trumpers in the Revolution were successively to maker in was clearly to be discorned in cortain recognised historic epochs, from the full of the Roman empire to the invasion of the Turks. Such, indeed, was his confidence in the interpretation of past church history which he construct in one managements of pass matter management in the performance of passers that its outlines, before long, would become us common and ordinary a subject of instinctong, would necessive as communication and originary a surgets or massive tion in Christian schools as the children's catechism itself. The tion in Unraccoil actions as the culturen's categorian racit. The appearance, in 1685, of two portly follow—the Works of Joseph appearance, in 1000, or ear purely rouse—use "voras or security Mode, edited by Worthlogton, a task on which that eminent acholar now resident in London, had expended an amount of actions not research which excited high encomiums proved a spoor and rescated white taking angle caramagne proved a further incentive to such studies while Clarus Apocaliptica, furner incentive to suca statutes where Claims Apocusyssea, more especially attracted fresh attention. The popular Interest, more especially attracted that attended the popular interests accordingly rose almost to a ferrer of especialcy when one Israel according to the associate of Time Outer and a notation Torgor of Union, the associate of their voice and a noncount charintan, proclaimed that he had ready for the press certain carman, procasinos una po tan reasy for the press certain Apocalyptical Expositions which would supersede all that had Appensyment anapositions while some supersons an area and hitherto been written on that absorbing theme. As, however his numeric occur written ou man absentioning means. cas nowoter man the light More continued to take rank as decorptions note: may one ugue, nowe continued to take rank as the most advanced and authoritative writer on a subject in contoo area outsucces and automatical or and a suppose in our needlen with which his ferrid imagination might find acope for its employment almost without a check although in other relations, employment atmost warmout a cocca authorizes in other resistance, it is ordered that be was already beginning to incline to a more it is structic that no was streamy regulating to intention to a mero guarded declaration of this openions. In continuous with contraction and other leading theologians at Cambridge, he had become afoce and outer remainst incoordinate as commentings, no mad recome since the restoration, an arrowed supporter of the doctrines of the the renoration, an account supporter of the documes of the church of England, and he regarded with undisgulard shirm the Growing progress of infidelity capecially as represented by Hobbes.

In other respects, the points of contrast between the master and the fellow of Christ's college are strong and marked, for Cadworths reputation as an author was almost entirely posthumous, the chief noteworthy exception being a sermon preached before parliament in 1647 when he was only in his thirtieth year. In this remarkable discourse, he had given distinct evidence of his sympathy with the party of academic reform by a candid arowal of his disentification with the provailing dislecties, on the one hand, and of his sense of the advantages to be derived from the study of nature, on the other. In the endeavour to arrive at a clearer understanding of natural laws, he urged that man was really only discharging a universal religious duty, the neglect of which was, in itself, a violation of the homare due from makind to its Greator

Naturally disposed to weigh evidence and carefully to ponder over each conclusion, Cudworth was as deliberate as More was unquestionably precipitate in his judgments and, at his death, a pile of unpublished manuscripts mostly unfinished, gave evidence of a vast amount of patient toil, the results of which were not deathed ever to be given to the world. His great meatorpiece, The true Intellectual System of the Universe, was not published until 1678, when it was fated to meet with a reception, for the most part, unaympathetic, and, in some quarters, distinctly heatile, according as it run counter to the prevailing scientific cynicism or to the growing religious formalism while, to quote the language of Martineau, it taid itself open to the rebake of scholars, for reading the author's favourite ideas, without adequate warrant, into the Greek text of Phate, Aristotle, and Plotinna. The whole treatists indeed, according to the same eminent critic.

conceded too much to the Pagan philosophare, recognizing among them the assess of Cartelian wisdom, to sait the assumptions of either the riching High Churchmen or the retiring Paritum. It placed too Bitle value on the instituted observances of religion for the former, and on its niceties of dogmes for the latter.

With regard, however, both to More and Cudworth, there is evidence, other than that afforded by their writings, which must not be overhooked. If we revert to the sapect of a failur a quarter of a century before The Intellectual System appeared—the time, that is to say, when More published his Astidate to Albeism (1659)—we find our attention arrested by the appearance from among the number of their disciples of two remarkable writers, who, like two genil responding to their call, had risen and vanished with equal suddenness. In 1051 died Nathaniel Cuiverwel, to be to him to throw over Cartesianium, and be did so his Exclusionon Isophyneus, which appeared in 1668, being especially designed as an exposition of a science of spiritualism, in opposition to the Cartesian doctrines.

trousan occurring.
In 1664, his Mystery of Intquity aroused afrech the public interest in lent pistod be its quanciation of the crims of bolten. middle if also excited glooms forebodings as regarded the future by its discussions on the foldiments of prophecy under the reign of anti-Carist. The interest aroused by these arbitrary interpretations of part historical creats was further stimulated by his returning to the subject in his Dirine Dealorses, published ! 1800, the most popular of all bit works. Here, in the fifth source and the took alone himself to point out that the occurrence of the columities which the soundings of the six trumpets in The or the transmitter when the sommings of the six transfers in an electric to be disactuation were successively to cover in was cieutif to be comed in certain recognised historic epochs, from the fall of the Roman empire to the invasion of the Turks. Such indeed, was his confidence in the interpretation of fast church history which be this pot forward that he rentered to assert that its outlines, before time per torsain time no remained to seek time the common and ordinary a subject of instinction in Christian schools as the children's calechian itself. The appearance, in 1665, of two portly follor-the Works of Joseph Med, edited by Worthington, a task on which that eminent action, cutter by vortanging a seas ou many that consensus sebolar now resident in London, had expended an amount of prioring and research which excited high encomiums proved a summary or the property of the encomiums proved a nature and resource which extenses and executive and execu namer mechanic to such stimutes since carers appearance, more especially attracted fresh attention. The popular interest none especially attracted treat attention. The bolattar interior accordingly rose almost to a fever in experiency worn one same rose of Oxford, the associate of Titus Oxfor and a notorious longue or Union, toe associate of their voice and a neutronic charleton, proclaimed that he had ready for the press certain charatan procumes the up you read the procure the procure of the positions which would supersede all that had Apocuspucat expressions water would supersede an time and hitherto been written on that absorbing theme. As, however his hiteetto ocen written on that a secretary theme. As convere use locabentions never can the light. More continued to take rank as incubrations herer caw the upper and communed to the rank as the most advanced and authorizative writer on a subject in contoo more auraness, and aumoritantic writer on a survives in con-nection with which his ferrid imagination might find scope for its nection with waters and earned integration in the relations, in other relations, employment attack without a cases, animotion to other teamount it is evident that he was already beginning to incline to a more it is orionic tunt us was surrout occuming to incine to a more granues securatives or an openiona in common with common and other leading theological at Cambridge, he had become since and ounce remains are uniquesses at community, no man occurred supporter of the doctrines of the the residential and he regarded with indiguised alarm the growing progress of infidelity capedally as represented by Hobbes.

In other respects, the points of contrast between the master and the fellow of Christ's college are strong and marked, for Cadworth's reputation as an author was almost entirely posthumons, the chief noteworthy exception being a sermon preached before porliament in 1647 when he was only in his thirtieth year. In this remarkable discourse, he had given distinct evidence of his sympathy with the party of academic reform by a caudid arowal of his discatisfication with the prevailing dislectics, on the one hand, and of his sense of the advantages to be derived from the study of nature, on the other. In the endeavour to arrive at a clearer understanding of natural laws, he urged that man was really only discharging a universal religious duty the neglect of which was, in itself, a violation of the homage due from makind to its Creator

Naturally disposed to welgh eridence and carefully to pender over each conclusion, Cudworth was as deliberate as More was unquestionably precipitate in his judgments, and, at his death, a pile of unpublished manuscripts mostly unfinished, gave evidence of a vast amount of patient toil, the results of which were not destined ever to be given to the world. His great musterplece, The true Intellectual System of the Universe was not published until 1678, when it was faited to meet with a reception, for the most part, unsympathetic, and, in some quarters, distinctly hostitic, according as it ran counter to the prevailing scientific cynicism or to the growing religious formalism while, to quote the language of Martineau, it laid itself open to the rebake of scholars, for reading the surbor's favourite ideas, without adequate warrant, into the Greek text of Plate, Aristotle, and Plotinus. The whole treaties, indeed, according to the same eminent critic, conceded too much to the Pagan philosophers, recognizing among them the sessons of Christian wiseless, to sait the assumptions of either the rising High Chrestman or the rediting Partinus. It placed too little raise on the instituted observances of religion for the former, and on its niceties of dogma for the initia.

With regard, however both to More and Cudworth, there is evidence, other than that afforded by their writings, which must not be overlooked. If we revert to the aspect of affairs a quarter of a century before The Intellectual System appeared—the time, that is to say, when More published his Asticlote to Atherma (1059)—we find our attention arrested by the appearance from among the number of their disciples of two remarkable writers, who, like two genil responding to their call, had risen and vanished with equal soldenness. In 1851 died hathandel Culterwel, to be followed, the next year by John Smith of Queens' in the latter Jour appeared Culture as Loght of hatere, and in 1000 Smith a your appeared converses a repet of receive, and, in 1000 continue Select Discourace, edited by Worthington. These two writers were both natires of Northamptonables, who entered at Emmanuel notin natures of normanistonaum, who entered at commenced to Whichcoics tatorable—the former in conego uning the person of immunous autorany the roune; in 1633 (when he was probably about dixteen), the latter in 1638, when already eighteen years of age. In 1619, Calvared was elected to a fellowship at Emmanuel but the restrictions then existing in the college with regard to counties made it necessary extensing in the country with repairs to consultre manue is necessary for Smith to migrate to Queens in order to obtain like preferment, although not before he had become well known both to Whichcote and to Worthington. The former discerning Culrersel's gening gare him not only raimble advice, but, also, pecuniary aid while gare min my omy variance and see, out, and, pecuming and wante the latter whose ago was the same as South's, but who had entered at Emmanuel four years cariler lived to be his lifelong friend, and wrote the notice of him in the 1660 edition of his Duconces. According to Worthington, Smith stodied bimself into a con-According to 1) or language, coming absolute minimum mus a con manufacture, and the extraordinary attainments of which the ampron, and the extraorunary assuments in which the correct give evidence lend support to the statement—especially Autoraries give evidence icina supports to the statement—especially we consider that he had to discharge the duties of dean and also If we corruser man no man to uncounter one of ment and and to lecture on Hebrew in his college and on mathematics in the to secture on scorers in the country and on managements in the section. The testimony of Simon Patrick, afterwards president of sensons. The tentimony or curson thereta, autorwards promotent or Queens' college and Mahop of Ely is to the same effect, as he bore Queens course and manop or my is so the same energ, as no bore witness to the merits of his departed friend in the same chapel which the latter had often discoursed—his sharp and piercing in which the cauter man outer discoursed— an amorp and perturn andorstanding, his Herenlean labours day and night from his processing on terement secure usy and night from an first coming to the University and especially his communicahas coming to the controlled and calculated the communication with respect to what he knew and the clearness of his language when importing it, wherein he seems in here excelled the famous philosopher, Plotts, of whose wherein he seems to have excelled the farmous philosopher, Flotin, of whose period in the first he was excelled garagine of his words, slide piece and the words, slide piece and Forphyty team us, that he was some same curves a rest of space, but was wholly taken up into his mind.

As Smith, like Mare, wrote on the immortality of the soul, their As coming that active, whose our two immurrantly or the sour time mortis, as authors, admit of a certain comparison, although the meriu, as animora, amino us a versum comparison, amongsi sue former when he wrote, was not yet thirty and directs his argument. number when we suppose may you many and universe me arguments mainly against the accipicism of the accients such as Epicorus and namy spanse one responses to the sixty fifth year and concerns Accretion, while the philosophy of Hobber. Notwithstanding however the inscendity of More a speculations and the remarkable norsers the informity of states a specimental and the residence of reading displayed throughout his pages, his readers can tange or resuming outpeaper curvogeness as pages, an resume a cardin disappointment at finding that after a rariety of questions have been mooted, with rather rague

conclusions, the author is firm in his opinion that the belief in the soul's immortality necessarily involves a recognition of the existence of ghosts, and that all that can with certainty be predicated respecting its condition in a future state, is that it will be an entity not needing food and not easting a shadow

Very different is the impression left upon the mind by John Smiths less discursive treatment of his subject and skilful comrecession of his well reasoned generalisations. To him, it appears that the main argument in support of the soul's immortality is that derived from the universality of the belief-a certain consensus centium, discernible throughout pages times, fondly cherished by the multitude, and no less firmly maintained by philosophers such as Plotions Proclus and Aristotle. And this belief, he points out. is, in turn, clearly involved in a yet grander conception, revealing itself to the sanctified human intellect as an inevitable corollary from the belief in the Divine beneficence. Over and above the Epicurean herd, he distinguishes four grades of spiritual existence on earth, of which the ardpurer despurers the true metaphysical and contemplative man, represents the final and the highest-in whom the soul has already attained to communion with the Divine Nature, and regards its confinement in this material

body as but the period of its infancy

In order to realise the conditions under which Culverwel's Light of Nature was conceived, we must bear in mind that, although not published until 1652, it had been written six years before, when the author was probably less than thirty years of age. As regards general literary excellence, he may be said to divide with John Smith the claim to rank foremost among Platonists. It is evident, from his opening chapter, that he did not conceal from himself the magnitude of the task upon which he had embarked, and which he defines as that of giving to reason the things that are reason's and unto faith the things that are faith's it requires, he adds, our choicest thoughts, the exactest discussion. that can be, to give faith her full scope and latitude, and to give reason also her just bounds and limits. Reason is the first-born. but the other has the blessing. Such is the assumption which underlies the whole treatment of his subject, namely that the function of faith is superior to that of reason. Reason discerns the existence of a God, the eye of faith, a Trinity of Persons the former recognises the immortality of the soul, faith spice out the resurrection of the body 'Berealed truths are never against reason, they will always be above reason.

290 Platonists and Latitudinarians

1

It was Culverwell's design to embody in a second treatise the oridence and the arguments whereby he proposed to prore first orners must use a gamento success no proposes to protes made that all moral law is founded in natural and common light—i.e. in the light of reason and, eccoudly that there is nothing in the mysteries of the Gospel contrary to reason nothing reportant to any secretar or one company contrary to remove, normally representative the light that shines from the candle of the Lord. But he was never able to carry into effect this great design, which would have admirably supplemented the rast researches of Cudworth. So fer indeed, as it is possible to discern the facts, it would appear that for at least five years before his death, Culvervel's labours were allogether suspended while a singular mystery involves his life during that time. It may perhaps, be conjectored, that his outspoken languago in his college Commonplaces, together with is generally independent attitude as a thinker brought upon him the dishyour of certain seniors at Emmanuel (where Whichote was no longer fellow), and, under the combined effects of anxiety was no longer isnow, and, namer the communical encode of antarow with respect to his future prospects and the strain involved in his literary labours, his health, mental as well as physical, no ma mentary mounts, and account, mentant as went as posseon, completely gave way. He died in 1651, when, probably not more then thirty-two years of age.

un unity-two years or ago.

With regard to both Smith and Culverwel, it is also not a little With regard to both contain and varyer act, is a any not a nittee remarkable that, although none of their contemporaries can have remarkation that, attenues notice of them than lifer or Possesseu a course Personal anomicuge of anem man alore or Codworth, in the pages of neither of these do we find any reference Character, in the pages of includes of stones on we must any reservice either to them or to their writings. It is possible, indeed, that culer to their ur to shear sittings to in insuluce, insects, that Collected's depreciatory language as to Descutes may have Collective a depreciatory sanguage as to researce may mave offended More at the time when he was still in the first finsh of outeneed More as the same week no was sent in success of the admiration for the great French philosopher but, on the whole, ms accurations are too green a record parameters on an out are named it seems most probable that both the newly installed master of it seems moss promoted that over the monty meaned matter to their and its most distinguished fellow were elatined by the Considence with which these new theories were advanced by the connection with the videspread tencapocate, when more as the time) to repudiate all degration dency (arready apparent at time time) to repositive an augmentation of whatever achool. It was certainly no reasoning toaccing or winascrer account. It was certainly no renasuring note that was sounded in 1655, when George Ring another nomber of the same society—who had been elected to a following member or the same southy—who had been secret to a summary from St Oatharine 4. In 1649—decored it incumbent on him to and attention to the impending peril. In terms remarkable for can attention to the imperiums perior in terms remaindance in their vigour and precision, the future history of Drumore, preaching from St Mary's pulpit in Cambridge declared that the prescuing from its carry a purps in communing occasion which men had so long built their opinions ery numerous on since men use so may vous more open and faith were shaken and staggered in this sceptical age

Every sea, upon a particular and several soci, is in quest of Truth; and so foolial and fall of that affectation is the mind of man, that sech one confectify believes throself in the right, and, however others cell throselves, that he and those of his party are the only Orthodor. Should we go abroad in the world, and sak as many as we meet, Phast in Truth? we should find it a changeable and uncertain notion, which every one clostic his own apprehendors with Truth is in every sect and party though they sweek facco-sistences smown these series and contradictions to one another. Truth is the Truthich Alcocau, the Jewth Tainnet, the Papital Consolie, the Protestant's Calcobians and Models of divinity—such of these in their proper piace and region. Truth is a various uncertain thing, and changes with the air and the climals—the Makonset at Constantinopia, the Prope at Rosea, Luther at Wittemberry Dairh at through, Arthubles at Oldwater's Bodimes at Cancory and each of those are sound and orthodox in the streetle of their own reign and dominion.

The spirit of compromise in regard to this conflict of bellefs, combined, however, with a maintenance of personal individuality is exemplified in Joseph Glanrill, of Exctor college, Oxford after wards follow of the Royal Society and chaplain in ordinary to Charles II. In the main, he was in agreement with Oudworth and More—his Lacs Oreactable being chiefly a reproduction of the theory held by the latter as to the prior extatence of souls, a doctrine which he held to be all the more defeasible in that it appeared never to have been formally condemned by any Christian church, while its acceptance serves to vindicate the Divine Being from the charge of injustice, since suffering in the present life may be punishment for size committed to a previous state of existence. In his Saddectasus Truscaphatus (1681), Glanvill defends the belief in witchcraft—a defence pronounced by Lecky 'the ablest ever published of dust superstition.

An excellent illustration of the points at issue among educational writers subsequent to the restoration is afforded by the controversy between Glanvill and Henry Sjubbs, a retired physician at Warwink. Glanvill, in his Pius Ultra, had been led, by his sympathy with the progressive tendencies of the Royal Society, to pass a rather indiscriminate censure on the scholastic Aristotic. This evoked from Stabbs a reply The Pius Ultra reduced to a Non Pius, setting forth the 'Advantages of the Ascient Education in England over the Nord and Mechanical.

In the meantime, we find the principles of the latitudinarians...

Whether the Church Inspire that elequence, Or a Platonic platy confined

To the sole temple of the inward mind-spreading widely although often rudely assalled. 'I can no more look back, Whichoote had written to Tuckney, 'than St Paul, after

I Ondewater in Holland, the hirthplace of Ameining.

Carist discovered to him, could return into his former strayne,' and his influence continued to extend long after his ejection from King's college in 1600 while his death took place when he was a great of Cadworths at Christ's college lodge in 1663. But, after the restoration, the tenets of the party seem frequently to have been confused with those of the Arminians. Among their number comment what more or the ariumana among men number Hezeklah Barton of Magdalene college, Cambridge—styled by Anthony Wood, that great trimmer and latitudinarian - was a prominent figure, and, together with him, his friend, Richard Cumber ind, of the same society afterwards bishop of Peterborough, who, in his De Lepibus Naturae, (writing in opposition to Hobbes) upplied to the observance of the moral law and the natural re-Apparent to the observance of the moral has and the manufacture of the same theorisation as that which it had been Culrerwel's aspiration to set forth and which Cadworth succeeded in expounding Another distinguished representative of the same principles was Thomas Burnet, who, as an undergraduate, had followed Codworth from Clare hall to as an unocegaminate, man contowed constrain from the charterbonne? Elmon Currents, and was atterwards master or use tensiterinouse tensor.

Patrick, Edward Stillingdoot and Tillotson—all three members of rance, cavaru summenors and amorane an unre memors of the episopal order while the hathamed was perhaps the most popular preacher in his day t_contributed powerfully to the whole movement. At the same time, there is to be noted a corresponding change taking place in the pulpit oratory of the church itself-a change compared by Locky to that which thank passed over English Postry between the time of Cowley and Dennes and had peesed over English postsy between the time of Lowley and Denne and that of Drydes and Poyse, and over English press between the time of deard and Erowne and that of Addison and Evifes

As regards the subsequent influence of latitudinarianism as regards the subsequent minutes of successions and subsequents of the Church of Succession of the Church of Succession of Succ whether on the pulps tractify in the control of captain or the leaching of its divines—widely different estimates have, from the reacond or us uniform story uncount common mate, from time to time, been formed by those writers whose sympathics have time to time, occur formed by those whose endeavour it has been to elaborate and define with increased clearness the doctrinal toem to encourage and common with the course the continues the course with the former in agreement with bount of the Courts for wome the former in agreement when Montesquien, have recognised in an habitual abstention from Augustine, mare recugance in an insurant accuration one of the most effective means of promoting unity aggration one or one many energies mount or promoting man, and concord within her communion, the latter have no less conand consoning around not transmission and one of the main came of the deadness, carelosmess and apathy in relation to religious quescontinues, car measures was a party at constant to successful those which largely characterized the eighteenth contrary. As to these divisor see the east, sing, v. Hist. of Emphasis in the Eighteenis Gradery 1, 25.

Must, of Expense on the Explanation Control 1, 25.

Bld. 1, 214—215; Perry G G Hot. of the Explick Charact, 214—215, 207—2.

CHAPTER XII

DIVINES OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND 1880---1700

Wirm the restoration of the church came a vociferous outburst of loyalty to the king, which threatened to engraft upon the style of the pulpit not a little of the extravagance of the puritan manner, adapted to other themes than those of its origin. But the influence of the older tradition of restraint proved too strong. The leaders of the restored church were men trained in the school of Land disciples, in the second generation of Andrewes, and, in the first of Hammond scholars in whom the classical habit was still strong, but who had learnt a severer simplicity of expression. The divines to whom men listened, and whom they read and copied, were, in literature, of the type rather of Sanderson and Hammond than of Donne or even Javerny Taylor and, before long, their language was deeply affected by Bunyan and Iraak Walton. Pedantry, erabbed conceit, elaboration of metaphor or Illustration, gave way to advanced directness, and the English language was made to show of what it was capable when it was not strained style, casting off imitation, became direct and plain. During the forty years which followed the return of Charles II, English divines, in their treatment of serious themes, laid the foundstions on which Addison based his mastery over the language of his day

The transition was gradual. There were no startling moments in the development. Progress was not attained by new departures, by sudden originalities, or by deliberate leadership on new ways. Thus, we find among the divines of the restoration and the revolution but few writers that stand out among their contemporaries. The religious writers, for the most part, accepted the manner of their time rather than influenced it. Bunyan, Walton and Dryden had no peors among the professional rriters on religion. In the ecclesiastical writers of the time, with an occasional exception, we find a high level of careful excellence, but nothing that recalls the complexous individuality of Andrews, or Mountague or Jeremy Taylor. Nor can we say that the theological writing of the period

294 Droines of the Church of England

can be divided into definite literary achooks. The style is very much a matter of date yet not always that for there are an vival, and a few anticipations, of other days. The later Caroline divines may be said almost exactly to cover among them, the arrange may be said sometimes case by to cover sometimes one or they include George Modely who was born in 1597, and Herbert Thorndlke, born in the next year while few of their completions representatives survived the reign of William III.

Herbert Thorndike is important rather for his opinions than for his literary morits. He was a catholic anglican of the most convinced and complete kind. He was a learned scholar an imcontinued and complete and. He was a realized actions and portant contributor to Brian Walton a Polyplot Bible, finished in 1837 and an influential, though not self-amortire, member of the Sarry conference. His position in English theology is perhaps, carry consessant in position in request memory in personal best expressed in the book he published in 1870. The Referredien of the Church of England better than that of the Council of Trent Hoadrocated for example, the practice of confession, using larguage so strong as in my judgmenti no Christian Kingdom or State can maintain Haelf to be In my judgment so Oktistim Ringdom or State one maintain stant to no which it produced more effectually than by giving force and effect to the law at private confession once a year by such season as may seem both the reservation of the sacrament for the sick, in both kinds, and not after the Roman fashion, only in one and the appeal to nor, after the authors tassing only in our area was appeared. Scripture as interpreted in the primitive church. In his Springer Scripture as microproved in the primative country in the Church of England (1659), he had topse to the trapecty of the unsure of insparent (anoth to me desired the restoration of the episcopate as in ancient times. descret the resoursation of the open-column as in singular man, the one of prayer for the dead and the introduction into the the me or prayer the me touch and one intermediate the English communion service of the Epikleris before the consecrathen. He was a student of liturgies, at a time when they were not and his studies were reflected in a repeated use of quotations from the Fathers which rembods the reader of Andrews ann contemporaries.

John Cosin, who, born in 1594, died in the same year as Thorndike (1679), was also a litergiologist, and, as carry as 1697 Anomalies (10/2), was aim a marginosom, and, as tarry as and published A Collection of Private Depositors, at the request of Charles I, to supply as English antidote to the Roman devotions descent to supply as conficunt automotic to use success to research of queen Henricita Maria s ladica. Cestr, in many respects. required formality in the nature of his interests, in the main occurred stumpulso in the instance of an interests, in the influence. But or was much more attractive writer of Roglish and has at times. touch of Jeromy Taylor he had an ear for the moste of prose, though he did not always take pains to be in tune himself, but he was certainly not, as Aubrey tells us, though unconvincingly, that Thorndike was, a good poet, though his compressed translation of Vent Orestor has merit.

Side by side with these two writers may be placed George Morley, the 'honest doctor of the exiled court, who wrote little and that rather in the antique style, but was as witty as he was nions, the friend of Walton and Clarendon, and yet a Calvinlat se men were when he learnt his theology Thorndike was a probendary of Westminster Cosin, chaplain to Charles I and master of Peterhouse, became bishop of Durham under Charles II Morley died as blahop of Winchester A greater writer than any of these, Issae Barrow lived only to be forty-seven, but rose to the mastership of Trinity college. Cambridge, and left a mark of orlainality muon the theology of his age. Charles II, who had the means of learning which are at the disposal of kings, said that he was the best scholar in England but, though Aubrey tells us that he was 'pale as the candle he studied by his writings show little of the wearisome preciseness of the pedant. He had spent five years, from 1655 to 1659, abroad, and, at Constantinople, he had made a longer stay than, in those days, was dared by most Christians who were not on an embassy or a trading venture when he key dying, the standers-by could heare him may softly "I have seen the glories of the world." It was this width of experience, as well as the extent of his learning—he said that he used tobacco to regulate his thinking -- which gave him the mingled strength and richness that made him greatly admired by critics of taste an different as were the elder Pitt and Henry Hallam. His manner of writing, which has been considered hasty and almost externporaneous, has been shown to have been elaborated with the most extraordinary care, his manuscripts being revised, rewritten and subjected to continual addition or correction. The case with which he appears to write is the result of prolonged labour the sentences are smooth, if often lengthy the meaning is direct in reaching the reader and, behind all, there is unquestionable strength. Throughout, his appeal is to the reason rather than the heart or the car but, though he argues like a mathematician, he writes like a classical scholar He is never extravagant he does not aim at beauty or search for conceits, his characteristic merita are completeness, coherence, consecutiveness, and thus his chief influence was exercised upon those who wished to argue or to think—upon Locke and Warburton and the elder and the younger

296 Dromes of the Church of England

Pitt. It is not easy to find a passage which antisfactorily illustrates his style, for he treats every subject which he approaches so lengthily that it is difficult to discussand a few sentences from the web of argument or apposition. But a few sentences from his acrmon on the bounty of thankfulness (occupying nearly a handred octaro pages in his Works) may afford an example of the electrose and simplicity which under his influence, began to mark the prose

And verily could we become endowed with this excellent quality of de-And very cook we occups endowed with this excellent quality at the service was the weekly and beautiful thanking God for it, we recoded not to figuring in others good, and heartly thanking God for it, we access not to easy the wealth and splendour of the createst princes, nor the window of the months of the state of the createst princes are the window of the eary the relate some spinesour of the greatest princes, nor the visions of the included declare, nor the religion of the derivated anotheris, no, nor the promonous cortors, nor the religion of the deroniest anothers, no, nor the supplies of the highest angels; for spon this supposition, as the given of all and a contract of the cortors of nappiness of the highest anguly for spen this supposition, as the grey or as in God's, so the content in all would be core. All the first they can except the state of the content in all would be core. is used, so the content in all works be ours. All the fruit they can concern of their hoppy condition, of what hind source is to revide in it theresizes. et norr norpy condition, of what kind sower is to rejoice in it themselves, and to Praise God for it. And this should we do then as well as they My and to presse their for it. And this should we do then as west as they may including a good success is mins, if I aqually triumph therein; the riches are made to the control of the contr negranours gross success as mina, if a squarry triumpo taccast; and recess are mine, if I design to see him enjoy them; his health is take. If it refeats my mans at a cauput to see him enjoy them; are pession in manse if it retreats my splict; this victus males, if I by it can bettered, and have heavy complete the contract of the sport; the victor name, if I by it am bettered, and have heavy companioned therein. By this makes a man derive a configurous of by a pun himself and the state of therms. By this mone a man derive a commerce of voy spon imment, and makes kinself as it was, the centre of all felicity; strickes kinself with the states and actions in the centre of all felicity; strickes kinself with the mates himself as it was, the centre of all folicity; surfaces amount with the pleasure, of the whole world; secretary and the centre of the whole world; secretary and the centre of the whole world; secretary and the centre of panny and materia simulative with the Prometra, of the whole world; reserving to God the peake, he enjoys the attacacion of all good that happens to say?

In this, there are touches which recall the writers of the earlier Caroline age but the general manner of writing is an articipation of Addison, and oven suggests something of the style of Butler

Addison, and even suggests accurating or the sijes of Bester In his sermons, Barrow avoided controversy and preached in our sermons, mainter account communication and parameter morals but he was also a controversial writer of great weight, moran out no was and a commuteratal writer of great weight, and that chiefly against the papery whose followers, according to and trast county against one papers whose removers according to his biographer Abraham Hill, he had seen militant in England, ns negrapher Airman and, so has seen minean in lenguard, triumphant in Italy disguised in France. His treatise On the triumpoant in italy unguinou in France. In treatme of the Popo's Supremary published by his executor Tilletten in 1680, Fopos Depressory Processed by the executor amount in 1000, was a marketpleon, in the manner of the time, seeking logic rather was a masterpiece, in the manner of the time, seeking region nature than bitterness and completeness rather than renormous potential than difference and completeness raises man renomens poseum.

Side by side with this may be placed Costn's Huttoria Treacuto ty sate was the control towers at secret a sur-rebetantionis Popalis, which was also published posthumously in Desiration of the Ancient Catholic Faith and Doctrine of the Fathers a Designation of the Ancient Gallotic Fields and Doubtice of the Fathers (lattice (as its was first set forth) above that the deciring of The Fathers (lattice (as its was first set forth) by Pops Innocent III and Themselving to the father of the California of the tiation (so it was now see forting by Pope Imposent III and attenuates at Pope Flow the Fourth), was not the faith or decirring in the Catholio Garrols in any age before them, written by him in 16471 Coain had experience of endeavours to convert Englishmen to Roman Catholicism in Charles I's time and, in consequence, had studied theology with a special bent. Barrow, with similar experience abroad, and knowledge of the Greek church to confirm his resistance to Rome, any that a period of scute controversy was imminent in England. His Exposition of the Creed, Decalogue and Sacraments may be regarded as a dogmatic support for his fellow churchmen but its influence was eclipsed by the work, on rather different lines. of his contemporary John Pearson, whom he succeeded as master of Trinity Pearson was a notable preacher and an accurate he vindicated the authenticity of the Emstles of St Isnatina anticipating the labours of later scholars he was an active hishon at Chester from 1673 to 1686. But his chief fame is due to his Exposition of the Oreed, published on the ere of the restoration, which, till the last generation, remained the standard work of English theology on the subject. The character of Pearson's writing is its learning he was critical. elaborate, closely argumentative, replete with quotations. But his writing is never clear or flowing he is encumbered by the weight of his knowledge, and precedent has stifled originality alike in his exposition and in his style.

Worts, et. 1877 vol. 1, P. SPC. Published in Combs. Correspondence (Corrient Society), part 1, 1888, pp. 823 ff.

The earlier period of the reign of Charles II was closely linked to the days before the war. The chief writers had experience of carlier times and bore the marks of puritan or anti-puritan training. Besides those whom we have named, it may be convenient to remember that Richard Baxter who preached in London after the restoration, began to write his Life and Times in 1644, and did not die till 1891 that Jeremy Taylor survived the return of the king by seven years and that Benjamin Whichcote lived till 1683, John Wilkins (who preceded Pearson as tidapo of Chester), a scientific writer of eminence, an experimentalist and philosophier and a man of humour to hoot, was a link between these times and these of the later latitudinarians. He gave his stepdaughter in marriage to Tillotson, telling her as an attraction, that he was the best potentical Divine this day in England. He contrasted his own position, as theologian and babney with Coan a

While you,' be said, 'are for setting the top on the picqued end and downwards, you won't be able to keep it up any langar than you keep whipping and accompling; whereas I am for setting the bread end downwards, and so 't will stand of itself;'

and his funeral sermon, by William Lloyd, afterwards bishop of St Asaph and one of the famous seven bishops, speaks of the

298 Dromes of the Church of England

rehemence of his desire to bring the Dissenters off their pre Judices and reduce them to the unity of the Church In this aim, many eminent men concurred for of them, how erer occupy a position of eminence in English literature. Yet some of those who were, or may be called latitudinarians, or who were, if not men of latitude, men of charity left a distinct mark, as writers, upon their times. While Oilbert Sheldon, in his youth the friend of Falkland and a member of the liberal circle of Great Tow was too much occupied as primate of all England to be able to make any contribution oren to the theological literature of his are, Leighton and Burnet, Sancroft, Patrick, Bororidge, Stilling floot, in different ways combined writing with practical work

Robert Leighton, who was ordained prices at the age of thirty and became a famous preacher was principal of Edinburgh university from 1633 and professor of divinity there. In 1661 he became bishop of Danblane in 1669 archbishop of Glagow By the simple beauty of his life, he gave visible expression to the idea of true tolerance, which no one in all the sermiteenth contary more afocerely advocated and more fully exemplified. He was, at the same time, one of the great preachers of his day has, as too some time, one to the grows presented to me only the style is simple and dignified, abounding in aphorism rather and aspects ample and unguinees, accounting in appearant failure. In the reflection of the spirit within, of the inspiration which filled the resection of the spirit within, or the majoration which much the writer's heart. To Coloridge, it seemed that Leighton's the writers nears to construct as accurate was accurate writings, beyond anything outside the Hibic, suggested a belief armings, reputation of something more than human they are the vibration of that once struck hour remaining on the air Burnets description of his preaching conveys, with remarkable indicates a constitution of the free state of the state o the secret of his influence and, also as the note of his proce

His practing had a sublimity both of thought and expression is its and All prescring and a randomity both of thought and expression in it; and, and a substitution of the prescription was such that for some continuous and provided the prescription was such that for some continuous and the prescription was such that for some continuous and the prescription of the prescription abore all, the grace and gravity or his promonention was such that lev assets that the same of the sam him without a very sensitive smoother; I am ever I never that it was no different from all others, and, bashed, from everything that one could hope to the state of the state different from all others, and, indeed, from everything that one come nope to the up to, that it gave a man an ballgration at himself and all others. If rise up to, that it gave a man an indignation at himself and all others. It was a very southle hundralides to me, and for some time after I hand that you have the thomasts of the southless than the southless that the southless than the southless than the southless than the southless that the south was a very sensition investigation to ma, and for sense time atter 1 meters and 1 could not here the thought at my own performance, and was out of com-I could not hear the thought or my over performances, and was out or concentration when I was forced to blink of presching. His style was out or concentration of the concentrati frances when A was formed to being or presenting. His style was relies use fine, but there was a majorty and a heavyly in it that left so deep as impression that I amount was formed the assessment I have been the present a impression End, but lower was a majority and a nearry tail that fert so every an impress that I cannot yet forget the sermons I heard bim preach thirty years say.

If Leighton was a Scot, he had anymilated the English manner in regulation was a creek to man assuminated the resigned the archive he had the English theology and, when he resigned the archive he had the English theology and, when he resigned the archive had been accountable to the second seco ano mai use common menugi and omni se resussou uso second and ministered. If he would not say writte Burnet, that the English was 'the best constituted church in the world, he thought it was truly so with relation to the doctrine, the worship, and the main parts of our government. George Herbert, most typical of anglicans, was his favourite poet. He died at an inn in London, under the shadow of St Paul's, in the arms of Burnet, his fellow countryman and disciple, who learnt from him what was best in his own religious thought and work.

With Leighton, indeed, Burnet is naturally coupled, for both were Scotumen of liberal opinions who rose to high place in an episcopal church. As a historian, Burnet, whose labours in this kind extend beyond the general range of the present volume, will receive notice later! but he was a man of boundless activity. and it must not be forgotten that he mid with truth that his thoughts had run most, and dwelt longest, on the concerns of the Church and religion. As a theological writer Burnet, who lived to witness in the Hanoverian succession the triumph of his party and died on the day when George I met his first parliament. had a distinct position and a considerable influence. He was intimately conversant with ecclesisatical matters during something like half a century, and set a conspicuous example—to be largely followed-of how it was possible to be at the same time a latitu dinarian, a whig and an energetic bishop. Born in the land of presbytery and Calvinian, be became an enlacopalian and an anglican. He was a convinced supporter of episcopacy as the original order from which the others derive. But his interest lay in personal religion more than in theology He regarded 'the function of the pastoral call as the highest on carth. Of him more, perhans, than of any other writer of his age, is it true that Is style cost l'homme. He was an energetic Scot, of intense and perpetual vigour and vivacity irrepressible and, at all times, without the slightest doubt as to the truth of his own originas or the folly of other people s. He was a glorifled man in the street. always aware of, and intensely impressed by, what partisan laymen were soying exceedingly straid of seconing to have a clerical mind - fear which often prevented his own views from being received as an expert judgment and always ready to show that great statesmen were right and great occlesiastics were wrong. He was a keen student, a man who read quickly and formed conclusions clearly yet not a great scholar or endowed with a scholar s mind a kind, generous, enthusiastic man, a genuine patriot as wall as a strong partisan, but not at all a deep thinker, changeable in opinions, and one who changed generally with the party in power or with the popular voice a man who bulked large in the public eye, too large for his judgment to have the with many many or with posterity He was critariate or many one water at the property of the was critariated and the many of the many critarians and the many critarians are successful to the many critarians and the many critarians are critarians and critarians are critarians are critarians and critarians are critarians and critarians are critarians are critarians and critarians are critarians are critarians and critarians are critarian ordinarily deficient in taste, and, indeed, in real distinction of mind or feeling. The manner of writing about coclosiation questions reflects all this. He is connectent unsympathetic and narrow and his judgment of the religion of his own day is often strangely distorted. He is typical of a certain side of English charolumanship. His Esponston of the Thirty Nine Articles (1609) was for more than a century as famous as Pearson s Esponsion of the Greed Leibniz described it as a system of theology in brief, extremely vigorous and profound, and, what is better extremely temperate and logical Indeed, it represents the moderation of the English church without any nebulousness or lack of vigour As literature, it is remarkable chiefly for its doa not yiguar as merasare, is as remarkative curent source and the lucid compression of details into a coherent The merits of his more spiritual writing are much more complement. He ministration to the dissolute Rechester who died a believer and a penitent, is one of the most touching memories of his life, and he has preserved it, as Some principes is the Life and Death of the right honorable John Earl of Rockester 1690 in language of almost perfect plety reticence and true charm. And his admirable book The Pastoral Care, 1602 tree charm. And his seminance over the reasons very towards as a straightforward and sensible in manner as it is in matter and opinion. Had be noter written a word of history he would still descrye a permanent place among English writers.

300 Droines of the Church of England

With Burnet, may not unfairly be associated the name of another dirine, who was his antithesis in character Edward Sullingfleet, orms, who was on an animoms to coarsever possess promise the personal attractiveness gave him wide popularity non-called him the beauty of heliness. His Irrations. popularity munication unit the occurry of montees. The average-(1669), which, though directed against nonconformity regards the sprion of church government as unimportant, gave him a place Preon or courter government as compressed, gave one a paramong latitude men but one of his earlier works was a defence among saucoso men but care or me carner worse was a unconof land's Relation of his controversy with the Jesuit John Faher as required to Presented Assect of T. C. (1664). Burnet commended him to William III as the learnedst man of his age in and respects — a description furtiled by his Origines Secret (1659). and Origina Britanians (1685). Stillingflest's writing has no Acceptional merit as literature. It reflected without curiching to manner of his time and, when his learning became observed. a hooks passed out of man. Though his reputation as a man of letters during his life was higher than any of those vet mentioned, his style entirely lacked the distinction which could make it per manent. Another friend of Burnet was Simon Patrick, bishop, successively of Chichester and Ely who, commended at the rerolution to the new king's notice, afterwards became one of the commission through which the royal natronage was exercised in the interests of latitudinarians and whice. Patrick was much infinenced by the Combridge Platonists and preached the funeral sermon of John Smith. He was a voluminous writer controversial, exegetical, homiletic but his chief excellence lay in his sermone. Burnet called him a great preacher and he was said to be an example to all bishors, and all dissenters, in sermonising. What he did at St Paul's, Corent Garden, William Bereridge did at St Peter a Cornhill churches were filled and multitudes were influenced by the earnestness of the preacher Robert Nelson. himself a writer of importance as well as a leading lay churchman. said of Beveridge that he had a way of touching the consciences of his hearers which seemed to revive the spirit of the Apostolic age. This indeed is the character of his writings eminently emotional, tender, full of feeling and nathos. He was ranked amone the churchmen whom a later are called evancelical, but he was as emphatic in stating the doctrines of the church as any member of the school of Andrewes or Land. The age of sermons was not yet over If laymen no longer found their chief theological instruction in sermons they still crowded to hear a great preacher, and the preaching of a sermon, in a very great number of oases, involved, sooner or later in some form or another its appearance in a book. The list of theologisms which we have given might be very greatly extended if we were to add those who were primarily preachers. The Diary of Evelyn. who exemplifies the high standard of a devout angilcan gentleman. and that of Pepys, who must be ranked, for the greater part of his life at least, among the worldly supply constant illustrations of the interest taken by Londoners of the later Stewart age in fashionable preschers. Anthony Horneck, for example, a German who was incorporated at Oxford and, after serving a cure there, became preacher at the Savoy and was made kings chaplain at the revolution, was says Anthony a Wood- a frequent and florid preacher very popular in London and Westminster and Evelyn thought his eloquence most pathetic. His popularity shows that a reaction against the learned and lengthy style of Barrow and his school was setting in. Quotation from the classics and the

302 Dromes of the Church of England

Fathers was, indeed, becoming less common a rolume of Bereridge may be read through without meeting a single quotation except from the Bible early in the eighteenth century Swift could declare that he had outilred the custom of learned quotation but, during the last forty years of the seventeenth, a rariety of train during one man many Joses or one solutions of many of the survival Much controversy was compressed into the ayes survived name continues was compaced into me many and occasionally extended it. The literature of the Poplai plot, of the anti-nonconformist controversy of the Romanroless more under James II is well represented in seminors. There were plain, houses, good, grave discourses such as Peppe heard from Stillingfleet, whom he declared to be, in the opinion of the architation of Canterbury and the bishop of London, and another the ablest Joing man to preach the Gospel since the Apostles Archbishop Dolben, described by Dryden as [He] of the Wastern Dome, whose mighty acres

Flow'd in fit words and hoursely elequation

was equally eloquent and direct in his appeal. The language of both those preschers is simple and unaffected, and their argument clear and coherent they would have agreed with Horneck that crear and concrete, may would have agreed with iteriness may the object of the preactior should be to convert souls and not to point them. For the most part, however it would still be true to paint them. For the most part, no sover it arount and no time to say that English sermous, in this perfod—though at no other time acts they are more bobiler or effective acts trapes embestod. and argumentative than descriptive or hortatory

A special style belonged to a class of discourse which had to special says common. Now that prayers for the departed sere no longer publicly said, their piace was taken by the pemp, gloomy no longer princip son, some passon was maken up too possip Several, no longer princip seems, where solemn language fell our merror or one removed worment, where a solution among the break of rapmi) mu a conscious us one normal summer on one normal the horses which draw the coffin, or the customary clock of solemn the noises stated areas are count, or the economical cause of specime black which dispulsed the mourners into a pattern of imposing grief. The mess of extent funeral sermons is enounced hardly a country aguire was suffered to be buried without a cologium which country squire was success to be country success a consum success found its way into print and, on the deaths of great personages, tout its way may problem used the opportunity for impressing a wide are circular processes used an opposition to approximate for indicating and opposition of the control of the co The beginning to be popular Burnet encouraged, and Charles II, as restound on the both all through the soundedness contains apparently amurous is out an unough see sometime composition was much the more common. Whether it the actives confidences are more no more common. influence or popularity it still remained the sole class of litera ture with which erespone was, or might be, beought into contact and it affords a constant parallel to the literary work of secular writers. During the period of the later Stewarts, there gradually ceased to be a 'pulpit style pure and simple, the preachers were ordinary men and wrote ordinary English. Thus, after Jeremy Taylor they ceased to lead in the development of prose. No one of them had the charm of Feedon, nor anything of the dignity and splendour of Bossnet, Massillon or Bourdalone. They were typically, and almost exclusively, English. Foreign influence hardly touched them.

This is clearly seen when we turn to the most nopular of all the preachers of the revolution period, John Tillotson, a 'latitudinarian who rose as much through the pulpit as through politics to be archbishop of Canterbury It was said of him that his sermons were so well heard and liked, and so much read, that all the nation proposed him as a pattern and studied to copy after him and after his death, two thousand five hundred guiness were given for the convright of two volumes of his discourses. Little more than a century later, they could be bought for waste paper and it is in the last degree unlikely that they will ever be reprinted or studied again. Here, public taste can unhesitatingly be said to have formed a sound judgment. Tilletson a style is simple and easy in comparison with much that was written in his day but it is utterly without charm, or distinction, or interest. The thought is commonplace, and the language matches it. A comparison of Tillotson with Addison shows at once how differently a simple style can be used, how effectively the general aim of goodness can be ex pressed in prose, and how unexpected touches can redeem the exposition of thoughts which are the common stock of intelligent men.

But, before we have done with sermons, we must touch on the striking contrast, at once to the ornate and the commonpless, to Thylor and to Tillotson, noticeable in the work of Robert South, who was twenty years younger than the former and died twenty two years after the latter. South, before all things, was original. He rejected the flowers of Taylor and followed the simple way before Tillotson. But he followed it with a difference. If he delights not in tropes or figures, he abbors the commonplace and the dull. He revels in humour he continually shoots shefts of rillicule against vice, be it pride or hypocrisy inspiritude or anger. He had fixed orthodox opinions and considered orthodoxy important, unlike Tillotson. But he knew how to make beliefs effective without being renomens he could make home traile stick, though the wound did not fester. His writing is as sincere as Milotson a but of quite different quality while the one main tains a lorel of planness from which it is difficult to detach a passage of interest, the other is always vivacious, and the discenty in quoting from South is to find a passage which will not kee by its separation from a context equally vigorous and emphatic Many an epigram could be set down by itself but there was never a time when English proce lacked a maker of epigrams. Part of a longer passage, chosen almost at random, may illustrate at once the characteristic merits of South and the ordinary unaf fected language of Charles II a day It is from a sermon presched before the university of Oxford, at the beginning of the October term of 1075 on logratitude. The preacher is approaching his consequences, and after advising that friendships should not be made with the ungrateful, he continues

304 Dromes of the Church of England

Pallosophy will teach the Learned, and Experience may feach all, that it is a thing hardly smaller. For Love such an one, and he shall deeple year Command him, and, as occasion serves, he shall reville you. Give to him, and Sa shall bet hegy at your entlesses. Save his life; but when you have does look to your own. The freetest farmers to such as one are but like the Motion of a Skip spon the Werey, they large no trace no tion, belief According a comp apon fee framer stary source we stary source and stary believe earlier nor who apon him; they believe melly nor endough from I tary notices states here win again cases every necessar lists, nor season, but have him as hard, as married and as monomorphic as every All And seemed upon such a Temper, as Showers of Edu, or Eliers of A recovery unwested upon sixto a prusper, as outcovers or man, or interes or the Maling late the Malin Sun; the Sun available to the Malin Sun; the Sun available to the soft at all changed, or sweedened by these. I may truly my of the Mind of an Unanalysis or announced up was a conjugate of the Artificial Develop, that it is Artificial September 1 is in Improving the consumer. grateral person, tass it is Alaska sos-proy its is imponentable; incompara-table; Unconquerable that which conquers all things also even by Leve itself. some to occupant one was a same to occupant and unique and, even of Laws something the makind (we see it dely) but an Uncarateful heart control on success may be manual two see to county one as to agreement some country too not by the strongest and mobile plane. After 10 year Attempts, all your not by the strongest now seconds a name. After all your accompanies, no your accompanies, for any desiry that Man sun day, He that at Ungratefull, will be reconstructed to the control of be Ungratefull mills

Style such as this was well employed in controversy South's Animadicerson on Mr Sherlock's Book entituded a Vindication of the Holy and ever-blessed Transfy is the liveliest place of of the time Sherlock bimself (marter of the Temple and, nitimately dean of St Paul's) wrote well. His Practical Discourse concerning a Feders Judgment (1891) is a plece of sound and sober prose, and there is a touch of interest in semost crenything that he wrote. But he will not be read today and will be remembered only for the witty remarks on his short soloum among the non-jurors, and for having undergone the criticism of a writer far abler and more locid than binned.

South affords an agrocable diversion to the student of later sorenteenth century religious writing. Under Charles II, James II Acreses, vol. 5, 1897 pp. $12-514.

and William III, theologians seem more concerned to be serious than to be attractive, and it was natural that they should seek rather to convince than to entertain. Among those who attained distinction by writing absorpty, Semuel Parker whom James II made hishop of Oxford, in his Ducourse of Ecclesiantical Polity, morifs attention, because he shows (as, indeed, do not a few theologians by affinity or contrast) the marked infinence of Hobbes. He was a clever satirist, too, and he had views on toleration which were in advance of his age. But he did not leave any permanent impression on letters.

Among the mass of literature called forth by the controversies of the time may perhaps, be noted the little known Episcopolis or Letters of Henry [Compton] Lord Bushon of London to the Clergy of his Diocess 1688. These show that conferences with the London cleary were no modern invention and they are written in the plain straightforward style, without affectation or obscurity which was becoming the property of all educated men. On another side were a number of Roman Catholic and servedally Jesuit, writings, ranging from the enhanceral trentless of Obedish Walker to the vigorous polemic of Andrew Pulton. Pulton's component was Thomas Tenison, Sheldon's successor at Canterbury of whose manner of writing Swift said that he was 'hot and heavy like a tallor's goose. But in none of these, their imitators and their followers, is there anything which arouses interest. Apart from them, yet still winning fame chiefly through controversial works is the solitary and dignified figure of George Bull (who died as bishop of St Davids), perhaps the one English eccledantic of the period who attained to European fame. Robert Nelson's enlogy of his sermons above that they had a distinction which most sermons of the time lacked and they amply justified the praise. 'He had a way of gaining people a hearts and teaching their consciences, which bore some recemblance to the spostolical age. But Bull's sermons, in the eyes of his own age, were the least of his works. Nelson sent his Judicia Ecclesias Catholicae to Bossuet, by whom it was presented to the French episconate, and the creat French theologian returned the congratulations of 'the whole clergy of France for his defence of the Divinity of Christ. His Harmonia Apostolica, and, of his sermons, that on the Fall were, also, titles to high fama. But it is the matter rather than the manner which places Bull among the glories of the Caroline age.

So far we have considered writers who were closely allied with the national life. The church of England, in the years which fol lowed the restoration was the institution round which most affection. and most controversy, sathered and its representatives were prominent in the public eye. Nonconformist writers, whether Roman Catholic or protestant, had very little influence, they were not conspicuous for learning, and their defective education left them without a valuable literary weapon. It was different with another body which came into existence at a crisis in the national history

306 Devines of the Church of England

When William and Mary were called to the throne by the convention perliament, there was a large number of clerur who thought it impossible to take the oath of allegiance anew, the sovereign to whom they had already taken it being still alive. The doctrine of the Divine right of kines. Hobbism, the theory of passive obedience, united to confirm their refusal. And a large number of conscientious men, with the primate of all England at their head, went into voluntary exile from the main current of national life. It was natural that among such men should be some of the leaders of the learning and literature of the age. Sancroft himself had ceased to contribute to literature or learning but, in his day he had wielded the pen adroitly His For Praedestonatus, a delightful satire on Calvinian, was an early work but archblahous cannot afford to be antirical in print, and, when he became a non-inror Bancroft refrained from all written works. His chanlein Henry Wharton did not long remain attached to the party but his sympathics were certainly with the high church and high tory theory. The testimony of a great historian of the nineteenth century to Wharton's greatmen cannot be passed over 'This wooderful man, wrote bishop Stubbs, died in 1695 at the age of thirty, having done for the elucidation of English Church History more than anyone before or since! But his eminence is that of the scholar and investigator rather than of the man of letters. Among the definite members of the non juring body were several who combined these characteristics. No survey of this chapter of English literature would be complete which did not mention the work of Ken and Kettlewell, of Dodwell and Hickes. Thomas Ken was one of those religious writers in whom a beautiful soul shines through the words which express the sincerity of their appeal. The motto of his writings might well be the words which he set at the head of all his lotters ... All glory be to God. He wrote only when he felt deeply Ichabed tells of his disappointment with the church after the recovery of 1660. Of 1 Profuse to Replairme Searces Analisanum, Sad adition.

Ken and Kettlewell Hickes and Dodwell 307

three sermons, the best is that for the Funeral of the Right Hon. the Lady Margaret Mainard, at Little Easton, in Esson, June 30, 1682. In it, he commemorated a 'gracious woman whose good ness he knew from an intimate acquaintance of twenty years, and through the confessional, as that of one who 'never committed any one mortal ain. Here, sorrow was chastened by the delightful memory of virtue the charm of which he wrote gave a lightness to his style, and a felicity of touch, which greater writers might have envied. But all his writing, it is easy to see, was unstudied in form. His poetry, simple and flowing came readily from his pen ble prose, which often embodies anxious thought is still an excellent example of the prose which educated men naturally wrote in his day And, if he could write tenderly, he could also write severely, as his letter to archbishop Tenison shows

(written because, as he thought, the deathbed of queen Mary had not been made to bring her to repentance for her un dutifulness towards her father). John Kettlewell, himself a saint had a natural affinity with Ken his work was essentially practical and described, almost all his books treat of Christian duty and orivileges, merament and creeds and their manner is of a piece with their matter George Hickes, on the other hand, and Henry Dodwell, were scholars first and men of plety afterwards. The former was a student from his youth, a collector of manuscripts and antiquities he learnt Hebrew that he might diames rabbinical learning with the extraordinary duke of Landerdale and 'Anglo-Saxon and Meso-Gothic, it seems, for his own pleasure and his Languarum veterum septentrionalium thesaurus orammaticocritical et archaeologicus is a marrel of cradition and industry Hicken's style is alsarp in controversy, in general literature—concerned chiefly with the burning questions of nonconformity and of the outles-it is coloured by the diversity of his kearning and he shows like several of his friends among the non-jurous, the infinence of the early liturgies in which he was thoroughly at home. If Hickey was the most loarned clerk, Henry Dodwell was the most loarned layman, among those who refused the outh to William and Mary His friend Francis Brokesby preserved his memory in a Life published in 1715, in which the Accomplishments and Attainments of the lay-dictator are profusely enlogised in a style of crabbed pedantry from which the subject of the blography had quite escaped. Dodwell is not an easy writer, but, then, his subjects are not easy. He is mathematical and theological, eager to onote and overwhelm with authority Were the literary work of the non jurors, in both divisions—those who returned to co munion with the national church and those who abstained—to estimated by the writings of these we have named, its value ilterature, spart from its services to learning, would be adjudge anall. But Robert Aelson, in his Companion for the Festival and Fasts (1704), produced one of the most popular of all religious tons a marging the success which he achieved was deserved by the sincerity of his writing. Nelson did for the church of England in proce, what Keble, more than a century later did in poetry. He promy was a cone more class a contary more one in promy as showed the romance of its past, the nobility of its ideal, the parity of its forms of prayer. His book, though it is not more than good. or no overan or prayer and owner, months to a not more come soon containly not great, literature, had an influence which good work does not always achieve. It caught exactly the rolligious tone of honourable men trained in the traditions of anglicanium, such as Clarendon or Erelyn, or of typical characters, imaginary but very Cancelloss or exterit, or or sylvens cameracters, management out very real, like Sir Roger de Coverly or Sir Charles Grandison. The real, use on angue we coverny or our outeries orangeon. The religion which Nolson represented was that which Herbert has im rengant winess represented was size, which steel to the mortalised, the religion of an English sentiaman and his writing northmen, me rengion or an engine gentionari and me with has the quietness and confidence which belongs to the character

308 Droines of the Church of England

The period of the later Caroline divines, from 1600 to 1700, has no conspicuous literary merit it is a period of learning and mas no conspicuous internal merca y merca processor partners of conspicuous originality. Moreover communication raises used or comprisions confirmativy microurer it may be observed how little it was associated with European is may be observed now above it was announced with compensation or indebted to foreign influence. Ken read Spanish and may very likely have been influenced by the holy life of Pavillon may very many many menu minusimen my mio mny mio m cavimon a model French bishop. Many English coclosisatios treated a moost cream named analy sugarant contents with courtery But English procedure did French occasions while country the continue properties on not take the French for their model, and English theologisms not tage for a reven for their money, and engine strongered seemed to pay little heed to what was being said over see. There secured to July meso accuse to what was the course some announced than that between the attitude of the cound do no greater contrast than tens occasion and assume or and Elizabethans and the later Carolines towards foreign literature construction and two same constitutions are at the constitution of the church abroad, in the cast among the opposited Christians in to control action, in one case, among the oppressed currentees. Turkey and in the ameriton of Galliem liberties, began, it is true, Turkey am in the assertion of transcau interries, organ, is a true, to grow at the end of the century and it was fostered by the nonto grow as the end of the crowney and it was reasoned by the most part, English theology remained apart James but, me me more part, response mounts temestree age. trun me cancer at sample, more direct, more typically national

CHAPTER XIII

LEGAL LITERATURE

1

In order to treat at all adequately the subject of legal literature in the seventeenth century it seems necessary to make a rapid survey of the writings of the earlier periods-Indeed, to go back to the very origines juridicales, and that for two reasons. First because English law even more than English liberty had hroadened down from precedent to precedent so that the key to the legal literature of the agreenteenth century has to be sought among the records of its predecemors. Secondly because the ormat law writers of the Stewart era-whether as in the case of Selden, drawn by the spirit of science, or whether as in that of Only driven by the condition of the system of law which they were administering and by the exigencies of party politics-were antiquaries, whose works consisted largely of commentaries mon the level scriptures of their patriarchal forerunners. Hence, if we desire to understand either the principles of Stewart law or the nature of the legal literature of the seventeenth century we must so back to the sources.

English legal literature may be said to have had its beginning when, about An. 600 king Ethelbert of Kent, newly converted to Christianity, put into writing the dooms of his folk funts exceeped Romanorum. The influence that moved him came from the Roman church, the model that guided him was furnished by the Roman capture, but—and this is the remarkable fact—both the substance and the language of the laws of Ethelbert were Keutish. They stand unique in legal history as 'the first Germanile laws that were written in a Germanic tongue." Further, they tright the

⁵ Buda, Hist. Rocker, Ett. et a. 5. Politock and Maltiand, Hist. of English Lew vol. 1, p. 11; Bernmer Deutsche Racksprenkleiche, vol. 1, p. 382.

Scheral relation of English law to Roman law through many suc general reason of sugard to to thomas for the cooling conturies. English law owes much to Rome—both civil and ecclosinstical Rome—in respect of unifying Principles, general and experimental from an armetrical form but in subacces, telegral arrangements and symmetrican form out, in and tance, it is of matter growth. The load given by Ethelbert of Kent, and his successors, was followed, after the lapse of a hundred years, by Ine of Wessex, and towards the close of the eighth century by Olfa of Mercia. With the codification of the cause contact of the first cra of the history of English legal literature was closed. It had seen the embodiment of ancient tradition in writing.

It was succeeded by the era of the capitularies, which add to, and amoud, the previous codes and bere, again, England stands and amono, two previous course and nore, again, regional scance, apart from the continent of Europe. On the continent during spars from the continues of chaos that followed the break up of the Carolingtan empire, general legislation coased. But, in England, Caronigosa caupare, severas regularios consecu. Due la regulario a long and almost continuous line of strong kings—Alfred, Edward, Athelstan, Edmund, Edgar Canato—laund administrative criti Accourant, communications of a resolute central government Taken as a whole, they contribute a very notable body of primitive

The Norman conquest, however led to complications. The and storman conquers, sowers not so companious and ministration of the English law fell into the hands of persons, annuarrance of the sequences are set into the manuar of pressure mainly clerics, who were ignorant not merely of the law itself, but mainly decree, who were ignorant not energy or the language in which it was fromplicated. The English prople clamoured for Laga Endreardi, that is, for the law as it people cusmoured for Auge Data scarut, that is, for the day as a bad been observed during the reign of the Confessor. The Normans, had occusioned reasoning we ring to the comment the reasoning for their part—those who were rulers, by means of formal inquests, and being besters than such sources as more stallable made and private personal trust south southers as where assured the find out what Lago Endeants was and to energy causes to any out wine takes transverse was sent to reader it accessible to the clerical mind through the medium of remoter it accessions to the covering mine amongs the measured.

Latin translations. The works that resulted mark the third period Actin translations. The works time resulted mark the timu person of the history of legal literature in England (1006—1106). The on the mental of them as have survived to the most important annual sum of them as nave survivor to an increase time are Rectudines Singularian Personarian, Layer process time are recutationed congruences revocation, repre-Willolm I (also in a French reculon Les Lets Williams), Liber Onaderpartities Logic Hearies I and the late Norman and half Vacuarpurium topes Edwards Confessoria. The main fact which specificat topic complications is that, during the century which emerges from bases comparations is that during the century wince England. The division of the law of England is threefold, my Anguant. And invasing on the law of Memory, the law of Mercia, and the Danelaw. It was the task of the Angerina, and especially of Henry II, not only to weld the peoples of England together and to amalgamete the institutions of conquerors and conquered, but, also to create the common law

The common law of Rogland, in the twelfth century, was a new creature. There were in it elements taken from the old West Saxon, Mercian and Dunish law there were also elements derived from Norman custom but the most important elements were novel, and were introduced by the authoritative over-ruling of the Mor's court! Hos tremendum regias malestalis impersum, as Leaves Henrici call it, was immemply extended by the Angevin kings and their ministers. By means of royal writs, issuing from chancery they called such cases as they would before the curio regus or its itinerant justices and these cases they treated with equitable freedom, drawing their law edectically from many sources, of which, perhaps, at any rate in the sphere of public law. the Frankish were more important than the English' But, though the elements were taken from many sources, the basis of the system was the royal writ. Accordingly, from the reign of Honry II, when the law of the king's court began to be, in fact, a common law we get legal writings of a wholly new type. They consist primarily, of registers of write, of commentaries on write of directions for pleading in cases originated by write of records of decisions given in cases adjudged upon writs' First and foremost of these writings is Tructabus de Legibus et Consustedinibus Rayni Anglias, commonly attributed to Rapulf de Glanvil, Henry II's chief justiciar during the last ten years of his reign, but more probably written a 1189 by Hubert Walter Chanvil a nephew The object of this treatise is to describe the procedure of the king's courts, more, it does not attempt. Its noculiar value consists in its collection of write, the first, so far as we know, ever made and, since the making of this collection was almost certainly the work of Glanvil, the treatise is not

¹ Levis scien depile trian ex particio, alle coim Westwele, alla Mirana, alla Denchys eri. Leo. Hen. vt. 2. Ben, also, Policak and Maldined, Hist. of Eng. Leo. vol. 1, p. 106, and Halderrocki, Hist. of Ang. Leo. vol. 1, p. 2.

Of. Glasson, Histoire de Dreit, vol. 1, p. 27

Of. Sohm, Prinkissher Reals and rimincher Reals, p. 98, quoted by Mattiand, Espith Low and the Rescisaring, p. 98. As an example of Frankich alemants may be mentioned the jury system, the writ process and the biss of fearing.

⁴ Cl. Holdeworth, Hist. of Esy Lew vol. 11, p. 421, and aspecially the following quotation from Described dus Courier p. 17: Note too for bright rent ise principals et principals and principals are principals.

[·] See Gierril, prologue to the Transcise.

inappropriately called by his name, even if he did not himself

The form and the language of Glanvil abow very clearly the influence of the new school of Roman law, with which the name of intering of Bologna is identified and that influence is even more arident throughout the next classical work on English law namely Bracton's treatise De Legibus et Consectudinibus Anglias (a 1256). Bracton wrote, it will be observed, at a date which marks, approximately the very senith of the great legal remacence of the thirteenth century The study of Roman civil is—the common law of the universal empire—and the study of Roman canon law—the fits communes of the catholic church—then shared with the study of theology the intellectual empire of Europa Bracton, although apparently he never set at the foot of the distributed appropriately no never see as two recessions of Bologue, was familiar with Corpus Jurus and with the works of Ato, as well as with the Dooretum of Gratian and the Decretais of Gregory IX. His knowledge of these sources of dill and canon hav determined, to a large extent, the mould or carn and canon has neutrining, to a says causis, the mountain the character of his treatise. It gave him general conceptions and any consistence of the account of the state of the st a large outlook upon the legal world which he set himself to a mago outside upon suc regar when a most see success of portray and to construct an intelligible system on the lasts of native customary laws common law over the total protogrative in the sementeenth contains common may over me royal prerogants in the seventeement content.

The cantankerom Coke was was anyou apposing to him he was called as a witness on behalf of John Hampden he was quoted by Bradshaw when he delivered and manufact to Charles I Milton appealed to him in Defease Pro Populo Anglianno. It is difficult to conceive that English common law could have survived the attacks of its many enemics during the Tudor and Stewart periods, if it had not been east inte the form, allke logical and literary of Bractons treation. The ing form, and object and merary or oracions treasure and street as fulfield source of 7 So early as the thirteenth sentery is was described as Samue good variance. Portugal Principles and Valland Principles of the Samuel good variance. the early as too consecute entroy to was executed as consecuted the consecution of the consecution as consecution and the consecution of the conse redit. Pallock and Multised, Hist of Eng. Lett. Vol. 5, P. 184.

They for the substitute, as well as the form, of Readon's treating was directly as a second of the substitute was directly as a seco More for the the sustainment, as well as the form, of Densieus's Francisco was Glorey, and Provided the Transfer was Glorey and Francisco was given by the the manual francisco was given by the transfer form of the form of der twe stress forms common sources is a disputed point. Het William forms etchin an extreme when he says, I am perfectly very that he copied furthers about sweet for the copied furthers. About sweet for the copied furthers were about sweet for the copied furthers. They when he may, I am perfectly with that he common destinate ablored were no word. By Harry Malon is more medicate in electrical (Author) Jones ablored were no a final of the contents were Armony becomes from Jones 2, p. 250 that only word. The finery states is more analysis in singuing (Assists Loss, P. EV) that only a first of the southern were directly between these Corpus July. The two wave a first of the emission was directly forevend from Corpor Forts. The river new commonly half, however is that Remember Street forevertige was quite incoming a contract of the commency lade, herevier is that Dissective Street between the second state of the latest second seco other works, which, in the main, were summaries of Bracton compiled for the use of the legal practitioners. Foremost among these were two-both of data about 1200—the one known as Fleta, written in Latin, and the other, Bratica, written in French (of the Stratford-attle-Bowe order), which was the language of the courts at that time!

In this same provincial French were composed the next series of works in legal literature which demand mention, namely, the Foor Books. English common law—in striking contrast to Roman law—has been developed by cases adjudged. Each unreversed judicial decision forms a precedent to be followed in all subsequent cases of a similar kind. Hence, the necessity for law reports, and the strange thing is that their provision has always been left to private enterprise. We have a more or less complete series of reports from 1829 to the present day?

Those of the period from 1994 to 1534 are known as the Year Books. These Year Books rank with the Old English Chronical and the Denceday Book among Englands unique historical treasures. 'They should be our glory say Pollock and Maitland, for no other country has anything like them. The same writers are, however compelled to add that 'they are our disgrace, for no other country would have so neglected them? Beginning as mere students note books, they rapidly developed into regular reports of the proceedings in court. Though their arguments are sometimes inconclusive, they are full of human interest, giving, as they do, the instance nerves of the old-world lawsuits. Humour and pression often manifest themselves beneath the formalities of proceedure, as when John de Mowbray, in a burst of irritation, tells the bishop of Chester to 'go to the great derif! It is difficult to key whether the Fear Books are more valuable to the lawyer the historian, or the philologer. To the lawyer they reveal the material out of which, on the foundation of writs, the structure of common law was relaced—that common law by which the lives

⁴ To this period belongs that apperspired work The Mirror of Justices which, mannly through the influence of Ouks, was lessy regarded as a perioda total control of the Policy of the Outer American Control of the Policy of Outer American of The Mirror and Holdeworth's Hint Ray, Low vol. 11, pp. 851—250.

² In 1835 there were over 1800 volume. Pellock, First Back of Jurippudents, p. 300.

Pollock and Mattlend, History of English Law vol. 1, p. 2227

This is particularly true of the Year Bests for 40-40 Edward III, known to lavyers to Quadreposes.

See Hobseverit's Hist. of Ery. Law, vol. 11, pp. 444-482, where an admirable necessari of the Four Books is given.

of both Britons and Americans are conditioned to this very day To the historian, they supply first-hand sources for the social life of the later middle ages. To the philologer they furnish rich mines of information (as yet little worked) concerning a remarkable and originally uncorrupted French dialect. As the number of the for Books increased, it became convenient to make classified abridgments of their leading cases. The first of these was made, about 1470 by Nicholas Statham, baron of the exchequer under

The same reign and two other notable additions to legal illorature, viz Elr John Fortescuos De Landibus Legum Anglas, and Sir Thomas Littleton a Tentree Fortescue a wall known work was written (a 1470) in France, where the author was living to exile with the Lancartian court it was written to instruct the Forms Petroe Edward in the laws which it was hoped, he would one day be called to administer In form, it is a dialogue between the prince and the author its language is Lutin; Haring been composed for the edification of a non legal person, it is full of company our are commonplace then, but extraordinarily valuable today—concerning the logal profession, the training of lawrers, the constitution of the lims of court and the elements of juris produces and magnifice English common has bojutus out in detail its anheadouth to Bouran call has barrens and management resources to be presented in the superiority to Bouran call have become it was for this quality that Sir Edward Coke extolled it as worthy of being written in letters of gold. The same enthn startio common lawyer med even larger terms of approcation in againc common mayor mon even agree torms or approximate an experiment in a the most perfect and absolute work that was ever written in any human persons are answere were seen was over written in any number accessed. Yet it is a wholly different sort of book from that of Fortescue. It is a highly technical work on foundal land law ntended for the professional student and practitioner But it so measure for the development of what had then become the most mboutant pranch of medical common law it is so ludd and well was such according to make the so ludd and well injurious ocasion or monitorial common has it is no minus and wenteringed, its language—the law French of the period—the so forcefu rranged, us nauguage—the law r renea or the period—is so increased well chosen, that it has deservedly attained the rank of a classic, was written shortly after 1475, and I stileton himself is supposed was actived somety over two and restricted numbers as suppressed in the act of seeing it put into print by Lotton and mayo been in the act of accounts it put into print of account and account and account in 1481. It was the first glish law book to pass through the newly invented press and Sopular did it become that when, in 1628, Cole published his commentary upon it, it had already appeared in more than seventy editions.

¹ Cf. rol, 12, Fp. 506—8 as to this and other writings by Forteeness.

The advent of the printing press effected a great, though silent, revolution in law, as it did in every department of learning. It wikely disseminated logal knowledge it greatly facilitated the standardising of Justice throughout the country it provided politicians with an armoury of those juristic weapons with which they fought the battle of English liberty in the seventeenth century. The first hundred years, however of the era of the prunting press did not witness the production and publication of any new work in English legal liberature to be compared in merit or importance with either Fortesone or Littleton. Lawyers seemed to be content if they received from the press a steady supply of old authorities—registers of writs, books of entries, year books, abridgments, statutes and court keepers guides.

This literary sterility may have been due to the fact that English common law was out of favour in high places. The Unders leaned towards courts like the Star chamber in which not common law but something very different was administered. English common law, indeed, was during the first half of the sixteenth contury, in almost as grave danger of loding its supremacy as was the English perliament. It was saved, however by the inns of court, and by the weapons which the printing press put into the hands of these organised champions of precedent.

Of the new works which issued from the press during this century perhaps the most important-or least unimportant-was Saint German's Doctor and Student (1523-30), a dialogue between a doctor of the civil and canon law and a student of the common law, composed with the main object of contrasting the relations between equity and common law, but incidentally affording a good introduction to the principles of both. It passed through twenty two editions before, in the eighteenth century it was superseded by Blackstone s Commenterees. Mention should also be made of Perkins Profitable Book (1539), a treatise on convergnding, 'acceptable and preciouse to young students of two Abridgments of the Year Books, prepared, the one by Bir Anthony Fitzherbert (1516), the other by Sir Robert Brocke (1888) and of Lambordes Eurenorche (1681), a manual for justices of the peace, written in a style which, says a contemporary runneth like a temperat stream. The same writer a Archeion (1591) and Archaionomia (1568) are valuable, the one as showing the Tudor view of the relation between the common law courts and their various rivals, the other as a treatise on legal antiquities. Gentill's De Jure Bell (1888-D) was a ploneer work in international law to which a generation later Grotius was much indebted in the compliation of his more famous book with a similar title. Finally we note three great collections of Law Reports, the successors of the Year Books, and like the Year Books, in French, namely those of Ployden (1871), Dyer (1885) and Coke (1600).

With the name of the notable lawyer and politician Sir Edward Coke, we enter the seventeenth century We may divide that contact we can be removed to three periods the first that of the struggle between king and parliament the second, that of the commonwealth the third, that of the restoration and reroand communication and that this classification corresponds to the main political division of the Stowart cra. This is as it should be for nover were law and politica more closely bound together then they were at this time. When James I came to the throne, the scent unsettled constitutional question was whether the country stone insection communications question was whether one country abound be governed by res or less. On the side of the royal preregardre ranged themselves generally the equity lawyers and the order against them were the common lawyers led by Coke. Foremost among equity lawyers was Coke a life-long riral Out. Forcemes among educty naviers was comes mesonic trial and personal enemy Francis Bason (lord chancellor 1618—21). But Bacons fame rests rather on his philosophical achievements Dut recome same case resear on me puncespiness convorciness. then on the segan writings. Is as we use the control to said the said later of lord Brougham, that, if only he had known a ittile law be would have been compactent for he knew a good deal of law although he still remained fallible. He was indeed, caper to attain legal celebrity

I am is good kops, he wrote, that when file Edward Ooke's reports and I am in good stops, he wrote, that when he howard there repers some problem and decisions shall come to posterily there will be whe knower is my rose and decrease annu come to powerly to how theight—quanties who he the greater is synt-But he distipated his energies he did not carry out his great project, that of making a complete digost of the laws of England project, sees or making a computer origins or the mass or engages, and he died leaving legal writings of no greater bulk than admits and no more reasons regard arrange of no ground work than summer of their inclusion in a single volume of his collected works. Of ot time tentianou in a angie volume of an concerce works. These writings, the most important, apart from several arguments in important cases, are the tracts coulded Marias of the Long. and A Rending on the Statute of Uses. The former contains materials collected for the never completed digrest while the 1 For Rescars's view as to the used of a revision and days of the law of England, one the aphonium appended to his trustice Dy Asymoutic Selections.

latter discusses, with remarkable subtlety and philosophic insight. a highly technical department of equitable larisdiction. Bacon s scanty legal writings kept fairly clear of political controversy Buch, however, was not the case with the works of his contemporary, the civilian John Cowell, regins professor at Cambridge. In 1605, he published his Institutiones Jures Anglicans ad Methodym Institutionum Justiniani Compositae et Diaestae. an attempt to codify English law under Roman rubrics in 1607, he issued his more famous Interpreter a dictionary of law terms in which under such words as king,' parilament, prementive, 'subsidy he maintained the theory of absolute momarchy The champions of common law took alarm, caused Cowell to be reorimanded by the council, and his book to be burned by the hangman. Other notable civillans of the period who were to be found on the same political side were Sir Arthur Duck and Richard Zonche both of them men whose writings on Roman law mave them European note. On the other side was the formidable Sir Edward Coke (chief justice of the king's bench 1613-16), a host in himself. He produced many level books but his fame, as a writer rests fundamentally upon two, namely his Reports and his Institutes. In his political seal he was not always accumulous as to historical accuracy. To him was largely due the legend of Maona Carta, the acceptance of The Murror of Justices as a serious legal authority the fiction of the official nature of the early Your Books, and many imaginary rules of law I am afraid, said chief justice Bost, we should get rid of a good deal of what is considered law in Westminster Hall, if what Lord Coke mers without authority is not law Nevertheless, he did a great and useful work for English law and therefore, for England. In his Reports (eleven volumes, 1800-15), which are models of terms and vigorous expression, a highly authoritative and almost complete statement of contemporary common law is given. In his Institutes (four volumes, 1628-44), a mass of antique learning is brought to bear upon the explanation and defence of the Epollah. lexal system! Cokes title to fame is that he adapted the medieval rules of common law to the needs of the modern state, and recast these rules in an intelligible form, collecting and condensing the obscure and chaotic dieta of the Year Books and the abridgments. But, in political cases, his learning is always to be looked upon with superior or at least with cartion. His search for truth was morely monocontar. He kept one ope steadily fixed on the interests of his party There was, however living at the same time a group of men who were whole heartedly devoted to research, men who are rightly called the fathers of the scientific study of legal history Foremost among them was John Seldenbut with him should be remembered Camden, Cotton, Spelman and Dugdale.

³ The collection of the four volumes of Cole's Instances are as follows; vol. 1. Littaken's Frances; vol. 1. Mayon Gords, and subsequent statistics; vol. 10. Columbat Lawred: pr. 2 fundiciation of Corrate. As to the style, G. P. Masdeaull presents (Dec. 16tt. Rep.) In often reaches a perfection of form, artifating that franches from diskinger and that careful as not increase which is securified in a good legal style.

Selden was admittedly the most crudite Englishman of his day To a wide classical scholarship he added a remarkable knowledge, based, largely upon original research of archaeology history philology and logal antiquities. He was endowed moreover with a mind free from prejudice, a well belanced judgment a calm judicial temperament. I sought only truth, he said in one of his works, and the expression might well be applied as a motto to norse, and the caproment angular was the apparent as a more than all. In 1610 before he was called to the bar he published a discourse on the laws and enstons of the Britons, English and Dance under the title Jans Anglorus Facies Altera. In 1616, be issued an amotated edition of Forteens. Two years later be wrote—though for diplomatic reasons it by unpublished till 1630 his treatise Mare Clauress, an attempt to vindicate, on the basis of international law Eogland's claim to sovereignty over the of international man accounts common to strong many one and many sons against the destructive attack which Grottes had narrow scor against the constructive states where the two made upon it in his Mars Liberum. Finally in 1647 he gave to make upon to the me acure anormal analy the world his edition of Fleta, and, in a prefatory discretation the works has constant of a lifelong study of the origins of English By his work, he established that tradition of scholarij recearch into legal antiquities which at the present day is maintained by the society called by his name!

When Selden's Freta was published, the tragedy of Charles Fs When between a close was purmaned, the tragenty of charice as described to its close. Two years later it was finished. ourcer was unaways to the cross two years made to period of this and the communications were in the melting pot, few matters received more anxious consideration than did the laws of England There was, indeed, abundant need of reform. The delays of illigation were provertial the expenses of the courts were inordinately heavy legal procedure was a mare of technicalities amidst which fustice frequently lost itself. Frequence was felt

¹ Day Saiden as Lepal Histories, by Hamilton, H. D. in Branche's Proceedings Bue Soden es Lepai Richarian, by Hambles, H. D. in Brenner's Probability. (Writings 1910) and also, in Research Law Review 1910. As to Establish Table, Table. see below (u).

English as the Language of the Law 319

the pressure of the dead hand of the Middle Ages. On 92 October 1650 a committee was appointed to comider the matter of legal reform, and, three days later, parliament resolved that one thing, at any rate, abould be done-English should be made the language of the law A bill was accordingly brought in and possed on 22 November 1650 Till then, Letin had remained the language of the records, and French the language of pleadings in court But, in the seventeenth century what Latin and what French ! This is no place to enter into the subject, great as is its literary interest, and it must suffice to mention, as a specimen of the Latin, the indictment of a man in the Savoy quia tetheravit vaccam and sostermill, and, as a specimen of the French, the report of an incident at the Salisbury assizes in 1631, when chief justice Richardson fust amount per presenter la condomne pur felony ous preis son condennation jest un briefbat a le dit Justice que marrowly mist' The resolution of the House that these jargons should cease led to a good deal of activity in translation. But, apart from this desirable concession to commonsense in the matter of language, very little was accomplished. When discussion turned to questions of substantial reform, the would be reformers could not agree. Hugh Peters for instance, would have liked to introduce the laws of Holland, while John Rogers would have preferred the Momie code The body of laws, he said, 'lies ready before you in the Word of God. In vain did Matthew Hule, one of the ablest of English lawyers, in conjunction with a select committee. draft not less than nineteen bills embodying practicable improvements. Not one was carried into effect, and, before long, the establishment in the country of a military despotism, with the enforcement of martial law threw into the background the whole problem of legal reform. Apart, then, from translations there are few works in legal literature to chronicle during the common wealth period. The most important were numerous volumes of Reports—very poor in quality—mainly of cases of the reigns of James I and Charles I Matthew Hales London's Liberties (1850) Thomas Hobbers Elements of Low (1840) and, finally, William Prynne's Collection of Fundamental Liberties and Laure (1654-- 5)

The restoration of 1660 heralded a notable revival of the common law and with it came back its old languages, Latin and French, which it was not able wholly to discard till near the middle of the eighteenth century One of the signs of this revival was the publication, in 1608, of a new Abrulgment des plasters Case et Resolutions del Commun Ley It was the work passions comes as accommanded to command the passion and a friend of Henry Rolle, once chief justice of the king's bench and a friend of Selden. Its compiler had died in 1056, and it fell to Sir Matthew Hale to see it through the press. Hale himself was a roluminous writer on legal themes but he seemed to have little desire for the renown of authorable. His valuable introduction to Rolle is rangement or authorsum. The values of incommental to manuscript at the time of his death (1070) indeed, a good deal remains even as the same or ms death (1970) indeed, a good door remains even not unpublished, stored in the libraries of the British Museum and decoin a inn. His most notable works were his fragmentary History of the Common Law of England (printed 1713), and his Historia Placitorium Coronas (Printed 1739). Both these books deal, to some extent, with legal antiquities. A much more thorough surrey however of the field of early law and the insti tutions connected with it was made by Sir William Dogdale in his Origines Juridicales (1666). This valuable work was all but fost to the world for the whole of the first edition perished in the fire of London. Fortunately however a few prosontation copies had of non-sent out beforehand, and, from these, a second edition was prepared. The seal for the study of antiquity may in some measure, account for the issue of a collected edition of the Fear Books in 1679—the largest edition of the Year Books that has yet appeared, and still the standard edition. But this was more than an onterprise of antiquarian seal for the Year Books were still in constant domand on the part of practising layers, and many of the rolumes had attained to scarcily prices. The old law in fact, had come back in force at the restoration. But it did not remain without its critics and assailants. Prominent among these was the irrecordiable William Pryana. We read in Pepris diary (25 April 1666) Mr Prin did discourse with me a good with (as April 1999) air Frii die daesures viel me a good vanc in the garden about the laws of England, telling me the main faults in them. In 1609 Pryme published his Assundersons on the Fourth Part of Cokes Institutes and these, perians, include some of the remarks which their author made to Pepps in the garden. A much more formidable critic, however both of Coke and of the laws of England, was Thomas Hobbes. Truly he said. I never read weaker reasoning in any author on the law to search Arever read weather reasoning in any author on the search of England than in Sir Edward Coke a Jactitates. In his Dealegue o conjugate uses in our extractive contract and a Student of the Common Laws (paland posthumonaly in 1681) he assails with vigorous dislectio the and positively in Audi) to seeming mine regorous transcens and mediamental legal and political principles inherent in the works of Coke and the other opponents of the Stewart autocracy. But the mention of Hobbes confronts us with a new age, and warms us that we have reached our time limit. Though an Elizabethan by birth, he is in outlook very modern. As a writer on law, indeed, he has not even yet come by his own. His ideas, conched in severe and exact terminology, have not, it is true, directly reached the popular mind. But, indirectly through the works of other men, they have made their soveredge entry and they hold a commanding place in present day legal theory. They mshered in the era of Blackstone, Bentham and Austin.

11

To the preceding summary of the progress of English legal literature, through the great days of Bacon and Coke, to those of Hale and Belden, may be added a few words concerning a publication which has served to keep the last of these famous names green in popular remembrance, and which, so far as English books are concerned stands virtually by itself in the century of its origin. Table Talk being the Discourses of John Selden. Esq Being His Sense of various Matters of Weight and high Conscouence relating especially to Religion and State was first published in 1689 thirty five years after Selden a death, and pine years after that of his sometime amanuensis. Richard Milward (afterwards rector of Great Braxted and canon of Windsor), Milward was responsible for the collection and digestion of the utterances which compose the little book. Its title and general plan were manifestly taken from what is, perhaps, the most famous of all anthologies of this particular sort—the Tuckredes of Martin Luther otherwise called his Colloquia, which were first edited, in 1666, by John Aurifaber from the remembrance of himself and others. Here, too, the discourses are arranged according to subject rather than chronologically, and, as in Milward's alpha bettenl disposition, the series of sayings is thus deprived of not a little of its biographical interest and significance. Yet the reporter of Selden s Table-Talk chooses, as the motto of his collection, the words Distingue tempora! In the latter part of the sixteenth, and during the course of the seventeenth, century, were put forth not a few collections of the sayings or conversations of eminent French scholars, from the redoubtable younger Scaliger down to Gilles Ménage, renowned alike as a not very laborious Ot. Roellin, J., Marita Luther sein Labon and neine Schriften, 2rd ad. Elbertaid.

^{1963,} vol. 11, pp. 457 fl. E L VIII. (25. 2771.

lexicographer and as a derotee to the pleasures of the grea world! In England, on the other hand, the era proper of eas had not yet been reached, although collections of the myings of kings and magnates had become popular from the middle of the sevenand undirects man occurre technical more one minoric of one seaterscholars of the succeeding generations continued to unbend in occasional converse in coffee-house or common room, as they had lodulged their humour at the Mermald In the days of Ben Jonson and of Solden himself, or as Josson had (if the phrase be per mitted) let himself go in his harangues—called Conservations mitted) for miniment go in this instangues—caused conscribinos—addressed to Drummond at Hawthornden. The golden era of this species was mangurated by Boswell's Lefe of Johnson but Johnson himself whose conversations, like Martin Lather a colloquies, cover a far wider ground and possess a far wider as well as more intimately human, intercet than can be ascribed to Solden a Table-Talk, pronounced this English collection superior to any of its French rivals:

Unfortunately the original manuscript of Table Tulk is lost, so that some passages of the printed texts are of composite origin or actually uncertain but the authenticity of the whole may be regarded as established, notwithstanding the cavils of Wilking the editor of Seldens Works (1726). The period during which Milward stated that he had collected his materials from the lips of his patron ex tended over twenty years clearly the last two decades of Scidens life, for in the section Tricker, Belden speaks of himself as having written his History of Tythes (published in 1818) about farty years ago. Milward neither says nor implies that his manuscript was in any way royled or approved by Selden. There is not any need, it may be added, for ceiling in the eridence of style in order to determine the date of the atterances roomed in Table Talk. Aubrey no doubt, refers to Selden s writings when stating that he quite left off the obscurity which he affected in his younger years and Garondon, whose character of Solden is one of the carliest, as it is one of the most generous, tributes of friendship enabrined in the Ly/e of the great historian while noting that

For the of these French case me product to The Tellis-Tall of Falm Sailon, at. Irring, David, Edinbergh, 1884, pp. xxxi-xxy No. 1877C, Montestry, 1604, pp. 2111-227.
See for earse earther English extinuous of man, Mildingraphy to the present

tion.

Since Revenue Life of Johnson, ed. HIII, G. B., vol. 7 p. 211. Borroll, when he admits to the same than the She Bowell Life of Johnson, ed. Hill, G. B., Yel, Y. F. H.I., Horwell, when it additioned, discounting printersions of a Head statiler to his every like manufactures. Special Associated Which however, is raifner different to scheme and prescribed in his friend's style, in all his writings, seemed harsh and sometimes observed was careful to add that in his conversation be was the most clear discourser and had the best faculty of making hard things core, and of presenting them to the understanding of any man that hath been known. The essential qualities, and the supreme merit, of the style of Table-Talk could not have been more admirably summarised, though Clarendon's intimacy with Selden must have dated from about seven years before that (1642) which saw it end with the great lawyer's definitive resolution to cast in his lot with the parliament rather than with the king.

Topics and Characteristics of Table-Talk 323

On the whole, the references in Table-Talk to the political events and transactions in which Seiden had borne part, even before he became a member of Charles I's second parliament in 1626, are but few It is only incidentally that he mentions either the imprisoning of the parliament men, of whom he was one, 8 Carolil, or any of the proceedings of the Long parliament (except the removal of bishops 'out of the house'). He is less reticent concerning the dolars of the Westminster assembly of divines, of which, in common with other parliament men, he was chosen a member, and in whose debates Whitelock's states him to have taken active part, at times 'totally silencing some of the divines by comparing their biblical quotations with the original Greek and Hebrew texts. But the times were manifestly not such as to invite individual comment on the action of public bodies. for during practically the whole of the period which can be supposed to be covered by Table-Talk, peace seemed as far off as ever and, 'though we had peace, yet 'twill be a great while eve things be settled though the wind lie, yet after a storm the sea will work a while. Thus, 'the wisest way for men in these times is to say nothing.' Personal references or allusions, such as light up the hearthaide or tavern talk of Luther or Johnson, are, therefore, scanty in Seldens observations—save for a few assentable illustrations from the sayings of king James, or references to eccentrics like Sir Kenelm Digby or Sir Robert Cotton.

The distinctive characteristics of Selden's deliverances at his

See LX. Incondistion.

See VII. Bisheps in the Partisment.

Memorials p. 11, sited by Reynolds, S. H. in the introduction to his colition of Table-Tell, p. aviil. In OXV Presbytery Selden speaks with some satisfaction of the respicious delay of the divises in the assembly is answering the queries of partiement as to the practs of the precipiery's possession of the fee director. Their feelinging to answer makes us think there's to each thing there. · INIL hospitable board are of a different, and, perhaps, of a higher order nospinance countries of a unique, and, percapty of a figure of our We have described them as deliverances rather than conversations We mare uncertical anomals as court control across the speaker quite conactionally lays down the law while it is only here and there that room is found for objections offered by interlocutors or more probably suggested by the autocrat of the false himself, and, in any case, always supplied with a satisfactory answer any case, as not supplied with a annual supplied working of a powerful intellect, patting forth, without any effort of full exposition or sustained riginisms, but with perfect frankness and freedom of expression, opinions on subjects with which, however difficult or abstrace they may at times seem, it is invariably found to be at home. To occasional discourse of this sort, Selden, in the first instance, brought an equipment of immense learning in law and legal history together with the habit, which he indulged oven in his writings on legal history), of illustrating his discourse from non legal, as well as legal, sources. It must, however be allowed that the telesting boards of Willard (ago are not a random men ore reporting powers of memory—were but limited for Table Talk permana, un powers or memory—were our manion for Acoustains including in postical writings in tor our contains to a reach as copellish many of, vergous anitties in pages but it displays little interest in literature indeed, the pages one is outprays must enterest in interestate indices, one section on Poetry (UV) is not so much disappointing as fastly section on Fusing (Or) is not as much userpremising as many paradoxical. However cautiously Selden, even among trusty parameters. However commonly occurs, even surent transported from an application of his analytical inequa, may neve assessment from an approximation or an analysical powers to burning questions of the day it is clear that, in his later powers to corning questions of the day it is coar that, in his later year, his intellectual interests came more and more to concentrate your, me microcuttat interests came more and more to concentrate theoretics upon matters of state and church. On the former head, the was steadily and stardily opposed to any encroachment upon no was account and account opposed to any encounters upon popular rights, when those rights had once found expression in popular rights, which shows rights and caree round expression in the existing law and he disliked change in the institutions popular the extruog new most no unmarity countries in two unastrumous proposes or other whose growth had been a logal process. The longitude or other which, about the time of the publication of Table-Talk, theory which, and the time of the production of Auto-rank, was to assume control over the political philosophy of a series of generations—the conception of a contract personal formation of a same contract personal formation of a contra or generations—the conception of a contract between governor, and governed—pervaded Selden a views as to the political conflict Ol. Hamilton, H. D. Salden es Lopal Historian, p. 550.

See C. Penn.

Of Hamilton, H. D. Salden et Legal Historieus, p. 1992.

The Granker whom Sudden states he somewhat from writing squaless plays, were, and the state of the property of the pr of section, which we seem to be a second to the control of the con or seems, visuam urainev the purish practice and port and and (or one or one officer of Table-Tal) had assumed) his more substrated non. Settler researched as the second of the second educes on Transcripts has assumed) his more entained on. Belden entertained as fitting facility against letterers, as being stronger not of fring few LECTIES. Transcripts and it was for the forms Strang means against incorrect, an being strother fort or filter (one labelines 7) and if was in the former especity that the older Oracher seems to have of which he had witnessed the development. At the bottom of all political doubts and disputes lay to his mind the question Have you agreed so! If you have, then it must remain till you have 325 Journal consequence was that a breach of the contruct on the one side justified resistance on the other

To know what obedience is due to the prince, you must look into the To know what obcolence is due to the prince, you must look into the contract between the mand his people.

Where the contract is bruken, and the prince of the contract is bruken, and all the contract is bruken, and all the contract is a state to the contract in the contract in the contract is a state to the contract in the contract contract between him and his people. Where the contract is broken, and there is no third person to indee then the decision is by arms. And this is

Hence, Selden a advocacy of the right of registance, and his oppoaddon to conceptions, like those of Hobbes, which upbeld the duty of pastre obedience on the part of the subjects to the monarch. on passers overcoments on any parts or one supposes or one momentum. In its very bases, his system of political thought is irreconclable with the excesses against law that had been the real beginnings of the English revolution. Without mentioning names, he points at the incendiaries of the states who first set it on fire by swerving from the path of legality and in order to provide the sorereign with money contran the constable. But, though he reverences an act of parliament as laws he is without any superstitions est act to transmission as inn no so measure only outpersonness. Forerence for parliament itself as an acting machine of gorenment and no comme of an ounipotent chamber could be more severe than that which he passes on the action of the parliament porty though he does not make any presence of questioning the anthority of the assembly under its controls

On religions subjects, Selden delivered himself with more ex On rengious success, commit centrered minimum with more exporaries, he found it difficult to speak of the dergy even of the poraries, no tound to unucute to speak of the marky oven on the poraries and impedience not far removed from dislike. This projudice, as he freely confesses, was a remnent of times when it was not easy to find a person who was a gentleman by birth It was not easy to mm a parson who was a Sometime.

But, of course, Selden's antipathy went deeper than this. Though an advocate, in his own way of 'sot forms'

CILIFIC PROPING

CILIFIC WAR See also, INVIII Contracts, where, however there is a tensh of trong in the concluding spinone.

I.I. Inconstation.

KOTH. Periamont. This section consisted with a very manuscribe protect. ACVIL Parliament. This session consistes with a very measurable protest and a very measurable protest winding and a very measurable protest and a very measu Spitial present or any cort for the purpose or sarrying a tree in pursuances, wissing by with the old attention that a man is sent there, not to personal efforts, but to ED with the dolf attention that a man is sent there, not to personal selections, and the special fit over heart. Selden was respections of their fit, and, therefore a could be could not a selection of their fit, and, therefore a could be could not a selection of their fit. speak his own heart. Become was respections of instronts, and, thereign he sower no rate its power set of strart, dealered that it is either very good, or stark marght ne Auril, rameneal , See the rater paradoxical, but extremely fairwrite, GLE Prayer 7 See LXXXVIII Minister Divine.

what irritated him in the clergy was the mixture which they presented of religious form and workly motivo—every religion, he could bring bimself to say is a getting religion! Yet, morality and religion, to his mind, were inseparable, nor could the former stand without the latter Belden also disliked the clergy became of the incompleteness of their intellectual equipment theology was a study to which, from this point of view also he had given much thoughts and he says-in words of which the humour may have been heightened by the dollrery There is all the reason you should believe your minister unless you have studied dirinity as well as he or more than he At the same time, he could be Just to the position of English churchmen, at a time when it was denounced as filogical and hypocritical, and, on historical grounds, could defend both them and the bishops against unfounded charges! The fits divisuus claim for presbyteries, as has been seen, he derided. But his protestantism was outspoken and desprooted, and one of the most incitive things in these discourses is the little dialogue on the foundations of the contending forms of faith! His attitude towards the Bible may be described as frankly Eramulan and, in general, his religious standpoint is an enlightened acceptance of the creed and church of his fathers, equally removed from fanaticism and from faithlessness.

The real faccination of Seidens utterances in Table-Talk lice neither in the legal learning of which it furnishes constant evidence, nor in the historical Judgments which it pithly supplies or by means of a prognant word or phrase, auggretz, nor again, in its incidental mentrations of contemporary currents of opinion or necessary measurements of contemporary currents of openior of feeding. Its charm lies in the play of mind, which, passing from subject to subject, familiar to the speaker in its dopths as well as in its more superficial aspects, illuminates them all in turn. Seldens wit has many varieties, and more than one at in turn. Occurs were man many carecular and more man our of those, ball importeptibly reveals itself as true windom. By the or those, that improves priority research as a tro whether any one aldo of some lexitances of a course kind of wit, which still found ready acceptance in Seiden's ago-especially in the form of ancedotal Illustrations, with which he evidently took pleasure in

```
See LAXXVIII. Minister Divise.
                                               See VI. Blakep before the Parliament.
See CELI Matigion.

Sech as Ge rather explainted CL. Withher The Correction that of the second section of the section of t
                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           See XO. Moral Renasty
```

section and are remper to depression occasion with severy proper that manners are distributible, though he can builty have been an old man when he gave attenues to clinching an argument—there are others of a trenchant wit, too rough in flavour to suit the modern palate, and others, but not so many of a opinichm which tends, hardly less than coarseness, to mar table-talk. But there are others of a pleasant wit betokening a genial apprehension of the humorous side of things¹, beaders were their speaker manifests that kind of insight into the real nature of men and affairs which only the constant application of the mind to prompt treatment of intricate problems is capable of producing. Finally there are to be found in Table-Tabl filmstrations of that highest kind of wit which, by a wingod word, makes plain an everlasting truth—that gnomic wisdom which is as peliceid as it is profound. Here, humility and per spicacity join hands, as in the plain moral which ends a homely argument on Yows! He that rows can mean no more in sense than this

Thus, a simple sheaf of sayings apprises us, were there nothing else to show it, how for this great lawyer and deeply read scholar the light of reason abone with the same clearness, calm rather than cold, whether it foll upon the ancient tomes in his literary or lit up the clearness of political or religious debate, or burnt in the lamp hanging in the sancturary.

³ A fingle instance may be eited from LEXXVI. Measure of things. We say fown a retien peaker; and approve a retien medica; and yet, I warrant you, the pear fitting as well of thesit as the medica dose.

^{*} By way of example, see the explanation of the explana of painting tentife flaracers beads as signs on inne in CELVIII. Way.

CHAPTER XIV

JOHN LOCKE

JOHN LOCKE may be regarded as, on the whole, the most important figure in English philosophy
Others excelled him in Scolus he had not the comprehensive grasp of Hobbes, or the Poculative originality of Berkeloy or the subtlety of Hume but apocuative originality of nerveiley or the anothery of them be was surpassed by none in candour, sagacity and shrewdness. Those qualities recommended him to his countrymen, and the width of his interests reconciled them to his philosophy Ho rus a physician, always on the outlook for new knowledge, an advisor a physician, always on the outlook for new anowinger, an auruser of statemen a sufferer in the cause of freedom and an amateur or anacomon a sourcer in the came or recomm and an amateur theologian. His writings on economics, on politics and on religion expressed the best ideas of the time—the ideas that were about to become dominant. He was the philosopher of the revolution to become dominant. He was see pulsesopher of no revolution settlement and, when the settlement was made, he came home to sottlement and, when the soutienean was much, he came home to publish the books which he had prepared in exile. Even his great patting the pools which he had prepared in exist. Even his great work As Europ concerning Human Understanding may have work An among concerning attendant concernancing may mare seemed only to show the grounds in the human mind for the seemed only to abow one grounds in one imman ining for the leasons of honesty liberty and toleration which he constantly lemons of nonesty moerty and toteration which he constantly inculcated. It is almost with a shock of surprise that one realises incurcated. It is among with a sunce of surprise tract one results that this same Heavy by its historical plain method, gave a new tast this same discoy by its instructed push method, gave a new direction to European philosophy and provided a new basis for the science of psychology

o actence or paycumony
Locke was born at Wrington, a village in Someractable, on Locke was form as trington, a village in concernative, on Angust 1639. He was the son of a country solicitor and small 29 Angust 100x. Ale was the son of a country solutior and sussed landowner who, when the dril war broke out, acryed as a captain. Annuature was, when the parlimentary army I no sooner perceited of horse in the parlimentary army , no sooner personned in the world than I found myself in a storm, he wrong myseu in use wucht man i nound myseu in a sturm, no wrote long afterwards, during the lall in the storm which followed ong atterwards, daring the fall in the storm which important the kings return. But political nurest does not seem to have the kings return.

He political unrest does not seem to make a course of his education. He entered sorrousy unsurroce tage course of this concentrat. He cuterous Westminster school in 1646, and passed to Christ Church, Oxford, Frequentiator scaled in 1950, and passed to turns tunion, Unioru, and he had a home there (though as a journer assessment in your and no man a nonce there (unough deprived of his studentship by royal mandate in 1084. The official studies of the university were uncongenial to him he would have preferred to have learned philosophy from Descartes instead of from Aristotle but, evidently, he satisfied the au thorities for he was elected to a senior studentship in 1859 and, in the three or four years following, he took part in the tutorial work of the college. At one time, he seems to have thought of the cierical profession as a possible career but he declined an offer of preferment in 1666, and, in the same year obtained a dispensation which enabled him to hold his studentship without taking orders. About the same time, we hear of his interest in experimental science, and he was elected a fellow of the Royal Society in 1603. Little is known of his early medical studies. He cannot have followed the regular course, for he was unable to obtain the derree of doctor of medicipe. It was not till 1874 that he graduated as bachelor of medicine. In the following January, his position in Christ Church was regularised by his appointment to one of the two medical studentships of the college. His knowledge of medicine and occasional practice of the art led, in 1656, to an acquaintance with lord Ashley (afterwards, from 1679, earl of Shaftesbury). The acquaintance begun accidentally, had an immediate effect on Lockes career Without severing his connection with Oxford, he became a member of Shaftesbury's household, and seems soon to have been looked upon as indispensable in all matters domestic and political. He saved the statesman's life by a skilful operation, arranged a suitable marriage for his beir attended the lady in her confinement, and directed the nursing and education of her sonafterwards famous as the author of Characteristics. He assisted Shaftesbury also, in public business, commercial and political. and followed him into the government service. When Shaftesbury was made lord chancellor in 1672, Locke became his secretary for presentation to benefices, and, in the following year was made secretary to the board of trade. In 1675, his official life came to an end, for the time, with the fall of his chief.

Locke's health, always delicate, suffered from the London climate. When released from the cares of office, he left England in search of health. Ten years earlier be had had his first experience of foreign travel, and of public employment, as secretary to Eir Walter Vane, ambassador to the elector of Brandenburg during the first Dutch war On his return to England, early in 1609, he declined an offer of further service in Spain, and settled again in Oxford, but was soon induced by Shaftesbury to sp. a great part of his time in London. On his release from office, 1075, he sought milder air in the south of France, made leisure Journeys, and settled down for many months at Montpellier 71 Journal which he kept at this period is full of minute description of places and customs and institutions. It contains, also, a recorof many of the reflections that afterwards took simpe in the Kana concerning Human Understanding. He returned to England in 1679 when his patron had again a short spell of office. He does not seem to have been concerned in Shaffesbury's later schemes but suspicion naturally fell upon him, and he found it prudent to take refuge in Holland. This he did in August 1683, less than a year after the flight and death of Shaffeebury Even in Holland, for some time, he was not safe from danger of arrest at the instance of the English government he moved from town to town, lived under an assumed name and visited his friends by stealth. His residence in Holland brought political occupations with it among the men who were preparing the English revolution. It had at least equal value in the leisure which it gave him for literary work and in the friendships which it offered. In particolar he formed a close intimacy with Philip van Limborch the loader of the Remonstrant clergy and the scholar and liberal theologian to whom Epistola de Tolerantia was dedicated the letter was completed in 1085 though not published at the time and, before he left for England, in February 1689 the time and travele to rest and antiquency in a corner; some and its final form, and an abstract of it was published in Lecleres Bibliothèque universelle in 1683.

The new government recognised his services to the cause of freedom by the offer of the post of ambanador either at Berlin or at Vicuna. But Locke was no place hunter he was solicitous. also, on account of his health his earlier experience of Germany led him to fear the cold air and warm drinking and the high office was declined. But he served less important offices at duce was uncle commissioner of appeals in May 1659 and from 1596 to 1700 he was a commissioner of trade and plantations at a salary of £1000 a year. Although official duties called blm at a surry or protracted periods he was able to fix his residence in the country In 1601 he was permaded to make his permanent home at Oates in Essex, in the home of Sir Francis and lady Masham Lady Masham was a daughter of Cudworth, the Cambridge Pintonist Looke had manifested a growing sympathy with his type of liberal theology intellectual affinity increased his friendship with the family at Oates, and he continued to live with them till his death on 23 October 1704.

An Essay concerning Human Understanding 331

With the exception of the abstract of the Essay and other less important contributions to the Bibliothème universelle, Locke had not published anything before his return to England in 1689, and, by this time, he was in his fifty-seventh year But many years of reflection and preparation made him ready now to send forth books from the press in rapid succession. In March 1689, his Epistola de Tolerantia was published in Holland an English translation of the same, by William Popule, appeared later in the same year and, in a corrected edition in 1690. The controversy which followed this work led, on Lockes part, to the publication of a Second Letter and then of a Third Letter in 1890 and 1892 respectively. In February 1890, the book entitled Two Treatures of Government was published and in March of the same year appeared the long expected Besay concorning Human Understanding on which he had been at work intermittently since 1671. It met with immediate success, and led to a voluminous literature of attack and reply young fellows of colleges tried to introduce it at the universities, and heads of houses sat in conclave to devise means for its suppression. To one of his critics Locke replied at length. This was Edward Stillingfleet, bishop of Worcester who in his Vindention of the Doctrine of the Trinity (1696), had attacked the new philosophy It was the theological consequences which were drawn from the doctrines of the Essay not so much by Locke himself as by Toland in his Christianity not saysterious, that the bishop had chiefly in view in philosophy for its own sake he does not seem to have been interested. But his criticism drew attention to one of the least satisfactory (if, also, one of the most suggestive) doctrines of the Essay-its explanation of the idea of substance and discredit was thrown on the new way of ideas in general. In January 1697, Locke replied in A Letter to the Buken of Worcester Stillingfleet answered this in May and Locke was rendy with a second letter in August. Stillingfleet replied in 1698, and Lockes lengthy third letter appeared in 1699. The bishop's death, later in the same year put an end to the controversy The second edition of the Ersay was published in 1694. the third in 1695, and the fourth in 1700. The second and fourth editions contained important additions. An abridgment of it appeared in 1696, by John Wynne, fellow of Jeans college, Oxford it was translated into Latin and into French soon after the appearance of the fourth edition. The later editions contain many medifications due to the authors correspondence with William Molyneux, of Trinity college, Dublin, a devoted disciple, for whom Locke conceived a warm friendship. Other correspondents and visitors to Oates during these years were Sir Isaa Newton and Anthony Collins, a young squire of the neighbourhood, who afterwards made his mark in the intellectual controversies of the time!

Other interests also occupied Locke during the years following the publication of his great work. The financial difficulties of the new government led, in 1601 to his publication of Some Considerations of the Consequences of the Lowering of Interest, and Raising the Value of Money, and of Further Considerations on the latter question, four years later. In 1693 he published Some Thoughts concerning Education, a work founded on letters written to a friend, and, in 1605, appeared The Reasonableness of Obvistionity and, later A Vindication of the same against certain objections and this was followed by a second vindication two years afterwards. Locke's religious interest had always been strongly marked, and in the later years of his life, much of his time was given to theology. Among the writings of his which were published after his death are commentaries on the Panline epistics, and a Discourse on Miracles, as well as a fragment of a fourth Letter on Toleration. The posthumously published writings include, further An Bramination of Father Halebranche's Opinion of Seeing all things in God Remarks on Some of Mr Norriss Books, and most important of all the small treatise on The Conduct of the Understanding which had been originally dealgned as a chapter of the Essay.

Locks opened a new way for English philosophy Stillingfleet saw dangers ahead in that way but its discorney was Lockes title to fame. It was no new thing, certainly to lay stress upon method. Herein, he followed the example of Bacon and Hobbes and other ploneers of modern philosophy. Bacon had done more he had found dangers and defects in the natural working of men a minds, and had devised means to correct them. But Locke wont a step further and undertook a systematic investigation of the human understanding with a view to determining something size -namely the truth and certainty of knowledge, and the sysunds

³ The productions of Collins, Telenal, and the other deistion! uniters will be dealt with in the next valence of this work.

We have Lockes own account of the origin of the problem In his mind. He struck out a new way because he found the old paths blocked. Fire or six friends were conversing in his room, probably in London and in the winter of 1670-1 on a subject very remote from this the subject, as we learn from another member of the party was the principles of morality and rerealed religion but difficulties arose on every side, and no progress was made. Then, he goes on to say it came into my thoughts that we took a wrong course, and that before we set supplies upon inquiries of that nature, it was increasing to examine our over abilities, and see what objects our understandings were, or were sort

At the request of his friends, Locks agreed to set down his thoughts on this question against their next meeting and he expected that a single sheet of paper would suffice for the purpose. so little did he realise the magnitude of the imuca which he raised and which were to occupy his leisure for nearly twenty years.

Lockes interest centres in the traditional problems—the nature self, the world and God, and the grounds of our knowledge them. We reach these questions only in the fourth and last ook of the Essay. But to them the enquiry of the first three ooks is preliminary though it has, and Locke saw that it had, an importance of its own. His introductory sentences make this

Since it is the understanding that sets man above the rest of sensible Since it is the interrectioning that was man above the rest of scenario, beings, and gives him all the advantage and dominion which he has ever cemps, and give non an are somewhat and common when we are ster-them; it is certalaly a subject, even for its moblemen, worth our labour to them; it is certainly a subject, even for its accordance where our assects to inquire into. The understanding like the eye, while it makes us see and inquire min. Les montransants une une vice name a manare un see and perceire all other things, takes no notice of fiself; and it requires art and percent on other many many make it its own object. But whatever no the difficulties that its in the way of this inquiry; whatever it be that keeps on an amentate tout us an too way or time sequency; weatered to be time arrays on so much in the dark to correction; sure I am that all the light we can let in upon much in the section of the section was an installed with our own indenticability. ent mont, and the sequentiance we can mean with our two industrianounity, will not only be very pleasural, but being so great advantage, in directing our thoughts in the search of other things.

Locke will not meddle with the physical consideration of the mind he has no theory about its essence or its relation to the body at the same time, he has no doubt that, if due pains be taken, the understanding can be studied like anything else we can observe its objects and the wave in which it operates upon them. All the oblects of the understanding are described as adeas, and ideas are spoken of as being in the mind1 Lockes first problem, therefore, is to trace the origin and history of ideas, and the ways in which the understanding operates upon them, in order that he may be able to see what knowledge is and how far it reaches. This wide use of the term 'idea is inherited from Descartes. The term in modern reychology which corresponds with it most nearly is presentation. But presentation is strictly only one variety of Locke's idea, which includes also, representation and image, percept, and concept or notion. His mage of the term thus differs so widely from the old Platonic mountage that the danger of confusion between them is not great. It suited the author's purpose, also, from being a familiar word in ordinary discourse as well as in the language of philosophers. Herein, however, lay a danger from which he did not escape. In common usere idea carries with it a suggestion of contrast with reality and the opposition which the new way of ideas excited was due to the doubt which it seemed to cast on the claim of knowledge to be a knowledge of real things.

The Essay is divided into four books the first is a polenic against the doctrine of innate principles the others deal with ideas, with words, and with knowledge responsibility. The first book is remarkable for the way in which the author brings to bear upon the question all the facts that could then be ascertained regarding the ideas and beliefs of primitive and savage races. He points to the variety of human experience, and to the difficulty of forming general and abstract ideas, and he ridicules the view that any anch ideas can be antecedent to experience. It is in its most extreme form that the doctrine of innate ideas is attacked but be cannot see any alternative between that form and his own view that all ideas have their origin in experience.

Locke whose to avoid any presupposition about matter, or mind, or their relation. It is not difficult to see that the notions which he has expelled often re-enter unbidden. But the peculiar value of his psychology consists in his attempt to keep clear of them. He begins neither with mind nor with matter but with ideas. Their extitance needs no proof everyone is conscious of them in himself, and men a words and actions will satisfy him that they are in others. He first enquiry is how they come into the mind , his next business is to show that they constitute the whole material of our knowledge. In his answer to the former question we discover the influence of traditional philosophy or rather of ordinary commonscense views of existence, upon his thought All our ideas, he says, come from experience. The mind has no innate ideas, but it has finnate faculties. It perceives, remembers, and combines the ideas that come to it from without it also desires, wills, and deliberates and these mental activities are themselves the source of a new class of idea. Experience is therefore, twofold. Our observation may be employed either about external sensible objects, or about the internal operations acoust external sensitive outcome, or anomal uncommon operations of our minds. The former is the source of most of the ideas which To have, and as it depends wholly upon our source, is called so mart, and, as it uniquenes whom upon our source, is caused semisation. The latter is a source of ideas which every man has wholly in himself, and it might be called internal sense to it he gives the name reflection.

² Of Every introduction, see, Sy his 25, about 5, see, Sy his 10, about 1221, use, S.

Hence, the peculiarity of Locke's position. There are no innate ideas stamped upon the mind from birth and yet impressions of some are not the only source of knowledge the impromens or some are not the understanding with ideas. No distinction is implied here between mind and understanding transaction as impact many because mines and understanding, of that the sentence might run, the mind familiates fixelf with ideas. As to what these ideas are, we are not left in doubt they are ideas of its own operations. When the mind acts, it has are such as own operations. Then the name arms, is made and dea of its action, that is, it is self-conscious. Reflection, therean such of the actions and as such, is assumed to be an original source of our moviedge. Afterwards both Hume and original source of our anositouge. After warms obtain name with condillac refused to admit reflection as an original source of Consumer remover to summe removation as an original source or ideas, and both, accordingly found that they had to face the long, and nous, accordingly nouse that they said to tace the problem of tracing the growth of self-consciousness out of a property of semantions. According to Locke reflection is an ariconaton to section an independent, source of ideas. Without congrue, retain an interpretation, source or mean mountains mould have nothing to operate upon and theresometion, minu would make mounts to operation to be some of its operations. It is when he first fore, count mayo no mouse or me operations. The whom no make the any sometime that a man begins to have any ideas? The operations of the mind are not themselves produced by semastion, operations or the mind are not measured produced by semantical for working on The ideas which sensation gives enter by the senses simple and runnixed: they stand in meed of the activity of mind to and distinct the complex unlife required for knowledge. The complex ideas of substances, modes and relations are all the sees that something more is needed than these ideas of sensation. They are only jetited to 'the supposed or confused idea of substance, which is there and always the first and chief.' He bolds to it that the idea is a complex idea and so made by the mind but he is entirely at a loss to account for the materials out of which it is made. We cannot imagine how simple ideas can substit by themselves, and so we accusiom ouncives to suppose some substratum wherein they do substit, and this we call substance. In one place, he even racillates between the assertions that we have no clear idea of evolutiance and that we have no idea of it at all. It is 's supposition of he known not what. This meetsfulty, as will appear presently throws its shadow over our whole knowledge of nature.

BL II, shap, II, see, L

The new way of ideas is thus hard put to it in accounting for the universal element in knowledge. It has even greater difficulties to face in defending the reality of knowledge. And, in the latter case, the author does not see the difficulties so clearly. His view is that the simple idea is the test and standard of reality. Whatever the mind contributes to our ideas removes them further from the reality of things, in becoming general, knowledge losss touch with things. But not all simple ideas carry with them the same significance for reality Colours, smells, tastes, sounds, and the like are simple ideas, yet nothing resembles them in the bodies themselves but, owing to a certain bulk, figure and motion of their insensible parts, bodies have a power to produce those sensations in us. These therefore, are called secondary condition of bodies. On the other hand, solidity, extension, figure, motion or rest, and number are also held by Locke to be simple ideas, and these are resemblances of qualities in body their patterns do really exist in the bodies themselves, and, accordingly are primary qualities of bodies? In this way by implication if not expressly, Locke severs, instead of establishing, the connection between simple ideas and reality. The only ideas which can make good their claim to be reparded as simple ideas have nothing resembling them in thiers. Other ideas, no doubt, are mid to resemble bodily qualities (an american for which no proof is given and none is nonable) but these ideas have only a doubtful claim to rank as simple ideas. Lockes prevaling tendency is to identify reality with the simple idea, but he sometimes comes within an ace of the apposite view that the reference to reality is the work of thought.

³ A similar distinction between qualities of body was formulated by Gallies, Hobban had Demarten (its stiple may be traced to Demonthen; and the works primary and secondary year successfully used in this connection by Technic Hoyle, Origins of Former and Qualities (1985), pp. 10, 43, 100—2; sp. Trente (1971), introduction, p. 18.

In the fourth book of his Essay, Locke proceeds to apply these results an as to determine the nature and extent of knowledge. As ideas are the sole immediate object of the mind, knowledge can be nothing else than 'the perception of the connexion of and agreement, or discoverment and repugnancy of any of our ideas. This agreement or disagreement is said to be of four sorts identity or diversity relation, co-existence or necessary connection real existence. Each of those kinds of knowledge raises its own questions but broadly speaking, one distinction may be taken as fundamental. In the same paragraph in which he restricts knowledge to the agreement or disagreement of our ideas, he admits one kind of knowledge which goes beyond the kless themselves to the significance which they have for real existence. When the reference does not go beyond the ideas 'in the mind. the problems that arise are of one order, when there is a further reference to real things, another problem arises. The preceding books have rewrared the way for the solution of both sets of problems.

When ideas are together in the mind, we can discover their relations to one another so know as they are not taken to represent archetypes outside the mind, there is no obstacle to certainty of knowledge for 'all relation terminates in and is ultimately founded on, those simple ideas we have got from sensation or reflection. In this way, Locke rindicates the certainty of mathematics the science is merely ideal, and its propositions do not hold of things outside the mind. He thinks, also, that 'morality is capable of demonstration as well as mathematica. But, in mite of the entreaties of his friend Molyneux, he never set out his ethical dectrine in detail. In the second book he had reduced moral good and evil to the pleasure and pain which—as reward and numbhment-come to us from some laweiver thus they point to a source outside the mind. But his ground for maintaining the demonstrative character of morality is that moral ideas are 'mixed modes and, therefore, mental products, so that their 'precise real essence may be perfectly known. ventures upon two examples only of this demonstrative morality and neither of them is more than verbal or gives any information about good or evil. Yet the doctrine is significant as abowing the influence upon Locke of another type of thought, of which there are many traces, both in the Recoy and in his other works.

The real existences to which knowledge extends are self, God,

some that something more is needed than these ideas of semation ace that something more is merced than those mens of schautor.

They are only forsed to the supposed or confined idea of and are only formen to the supposed of compact of compact of the substance, which is there and always the first and chief. He successore, when is there and always the first and ones. And holds to it that the idea is a complex idea and so made by the norms to it that the sizes is a complex into anim so made by sometimes out untra out no menutury as a some to maximum for the made. We cannot imagine how simple ideas can or winds it is make. He cannot imagine now simple meas can as be accustom ourselves to suppose some superstain wherein they do superit' and the ac cull action attention wherein every to attents, and one we can substance. In one place, he eren vacillates between the assertions annesses an one place, no order variance and that we have no idea one we care no crear man or supersupe and that we made no such of it at all. It is a supposition of he knows not what. This on the second as will appear presently throws its study over our idea, but he sometimes comes within an ace of the opposite view that the reference to reality is the work of thought.

The new way of ideas is thus hard put to it in accounting for the universal element in knowledge it has even greater difficulties to face in defending the reality of knowledge. And, in the latter cone the author does not see the difficulties so clearly. His riew some is that the simple idea is the test and standard of reality Whator constitution to our ideas removes them further ever the mind contributes to our taces removes them for the reality of things in becoming general, knowledge loses from too rearry or tungs in becoming general knowledge tones tonch with things. But not all simple ideas carry with them the touch with things. Due not all simple notes carry with those too seems against carry with the colours, smells, tastes, sounds, and ame aguincance for reality Octours, amous, tastes, somms, and the like are simple ideas, yet nothing resembles them in the bodies the mre are sunpre score, yes including reseauces mean in one occurs thermalres but, owing to a certain bulk, figure and motion of their commercia out, owing to a current oute, agure and motion is cour-insemble parts, bodies have a power to produce those sensemeasure parts, cours mare a posses to produce more sometions in m. These, therefore, are called secondary qualities of tors in the Anese, intersects, are cause secondary quantities of bodies. On the other hand, solidity extension, figure, motion or bottom. Un see other many, sometry execution, nights, measure and number are also held by Locke to be simple kiess and rear, and number are also next by Lucas to be snapse were such these are resemblances of qualities in body "their patterns do really scene are recommended or quantum in only their patterns to round and a coundingly are primary qualities of bodies 1 In this way by implication if not expressly quantities or occurs. In the way by improvious a contract of establishing the connection between simple LOCKS BOYER, MALCHE OF CREATMENTING THE COMMERCIAL WAS VECTOR IMPROVED AND THE PROPERTY OF T access and reachy are comparing within the unac gives were compared as simple kices have nothing recembling them in things. Other ideas no doubt, are said to resemble bodily qualities (an assertion for which no proof is given and none is possible) but (en assessment nor winten no proof is given sim noute as (resulting) out those ideas have only a doubtful claim to rank as simple ideas. screen access mere only a communic cusm to same as amples measured forces prevailing tendency is to identify reality with the simple

A standar distinution between qualities of body was formulated by Gailles, Hobbert Phonograms, No section was be broad to Phonograms, and the words of the section and the sec A manar catanation between qualities of body was formulated by Quilles, Hobbes and Describe 1 He origin may be treed to Describe 1 and the words primary associatory were associated to a first contraction to Describe 1 and the words primary and the second to the Describe 1 and th that heavy he is despite may be found to Democritise; and the words primary and secondary were secondarily and in the someonics by Echael Royke, Origins of Parase and Condition (1864) on 10 44 100...1. on Young (1871) (Annalysis of Confere of Parase and Condition (1864) on 10 44 100...1. on Young (1871) (Annalysis of Condition (1884)). measurery were assumerably used in this excussion by Houses Noyle, Origins of Param and Qualities (1866) pp. 10, 63, 100—11 cp. Sturin (1871), introduction, p. 18.

In the fourth book of his Essay, Locke proceeds to apply these results so as to determine the nature and extent of knowledge. As ideas are the sole immediate object of the mind, knowledge can be nothing else than 'the perception of the convexion of and agreement, or disagreement and repugnancy of any of our ideas. This agreement or disagreement is said to be of four sorts identity or diversity relation, co-existence or necessary connection real existence. Each of these kinds of knowledge raises its own questions but, broadly speaking one distinction may be taken as fundamental. In the same paragraph in which he restricts knowledge to the agreement or disagreement of our ideas, he admits one kind of knowledge which goes beyond the ideas themselves to the significance which they have for real existence. When the reference does not go beyond the ideas in the mind, the problems that arise are of one order when there is a further reference to real things, another problem arises. The preceding books have prepared the way for the solution of both sets of problems. When ideas are together in the mind, we can discover their relations to one another so long as they are not taken to represent archetypes outside the mind, there is no obstacle to certainty of knowledge for all relation terminates in, and is ultimately founded on, those simple ideas we have got from sen sation or reflection. In this way Looke vindicates the certainty of mathematics the science is merely ideal, and its propositions do not hold of things outside the mind. He thinks, also, that 'morality is capable of demonstration as well as mathematica. But, in spite of the entreaties of his friend Molvneux, he never set out his ethical doctrine in detail. In the second book he had reduced moral good and evil to the pleasure and pain which—as reward and punishment-come to us from some lawgiver thus they point to a source outside the mind. But his ground for maintaining the demonstrative character of morality is that moral ldess are 'mixed modes and therefore, mental products so that their 'precise real essence may be perfectly known. He ventures upon two examples only of this demonstrative morality and neither of them is more than verbal or gives any information about good or evil. Yet the doctrine is significant as showing the influence upon Locke of another type of thought, of which there are many traces, both in the Essay and in his other works.

The real existences to which knowledge extends are self, God, and the world of nature. Of the first we have, says Locks, an intuitive knowledge, of the second a demonstrative knowledge, of intuitive knowledge, it the second a communicative knowledge or the third a sensitive knowledge. This view he proceeds to explain and defend. Locks holds that the existence of the self is known by immediate intuition. Like Descrites, he thinks that doubt on oy amnounce municon and to point out how self can be an the need is extraored, but no tains to point our now sent can come idea and thus belong to the material of knowledge. An idea of seef cannot come from sensation and the simple ideas of reflection are all of mental operations, and not of the subject or agent of are an or minimal operations, and not or one samples or some others operations. On the other hand, when he had occasion to discuss personal identity he followed his new way of idea, and made it depend on momenty its insured in new way of ideas, and pellongs to the order called by philosophera cosmological. It starts occours to the union cance of panesopous communication with the existence of a thinking self or mind, and argues from this with the existence of a timering sent or mind, and argues from an application to the necessity for an intelligent first cause. Locke reasons without question, the validity of the causal principle eren arance, whose question the range of possible experience. It was left for David ceyoun the range of positive experience. It was not the periodical content of the periodical con Regarding self and God, therefore Locke does not show any special regarding sent and thou, increases, access the question of the real originality to rice it is when no sacre the question of the real existence of external bodies that his doctrine of ideas as the sole existence or external bodies that an accurate or meas as the solid immediate object of the understanding corner into play and contain the solid contains the solid co immediate onless of the propositions of natural material likely said teams. He does mot indeed, question the transition from the presence of an idea of not invoce decisions as that time of a thing which causes sconnection to the extractions as time time on a tring which cannot the idea in mal. Here, he thinks, we have an assurance that toe men in me. Here, we minute, we mayo an assurance man descree the name of knowledge! although he admits that it is need the name of anomacogo atthough no annua that it is not allogether so certain as our intuitive knowledge, or the denot altogether so curami as our minimize knowledge, or use use directions of our reason employed about the clear abstract ideas of ductions or our reason employed about the ever attribute our own minds. Knowledge of this sort is merely sensitive it does our own manus. Anowhere or was not; is merely sensuate in more mot extend beyond the present testimony of our senses employed my extent objects that do then affect them? Necessary acous particular valores was no time and times. Account things, exemption more is deposit our reach. Any same was some sungerexcept in respect to meet minimum to present the formation of initial adopted therefore fall short of the generalizations of instantial shortes, measurements and the strictly so called. God has set some things in broad anostone strictly so cannot won mas see some unings in occasion of nature is not one of them there, caying out the section of tenture is too one of the tentilight of probe billy but probability is sufficient for our purposes. This sober practical note marks the outcome of the whole coquiry

Bk. 17 chap. 22, 800. R

PR. PF charp. 23, and & BL II, chap III, see 1.

our faculties being saited not to the full extent of being nor to a perfect, elear comprehensive knowledge of things free from all doubt and sample; but to the preservation of us, in whom they are; and accommodated to the use of IIIs.

In his other works Locke s practical interests find ample scope he deals with most of the questions that attracted the mind of the day, and he left upon them the mark of his thought. In Two Treatises of Government he has two purposes in view to refute the doctrine of absolute power, as it had been put forward by Sir Robert Filmer, and to establish a theory which would reconcile the liberty of the citizen with political order. The criticism of Filmer is complete. His theory of the absolute sovereignty of Adam, and so of kings as Adam's heirs, has lost all interest, and Locke a argument has been only too effective the exhaustive reply to so absurd a thesis becomes itself wearisome. There is little direct reference to the more enduring work of Hobbes but this work seems to have been in Locke s mind when he argued that the doctrine of absolute monarchy leaves sovereign and subjects in the state of nature towards one another. The constructive doctrines which are elaborated in the second treatise became the basis of social and political philosophy for many generations. Labour is the origin and justification of property contract or consent is the around of government, and fixes its limits. Behind both doctrines lies the klea of the independence of the individual man. The state of nature knows no government but in it, as in political society, men are subject to the moral law which is the law of God. Men are born free and equal in rights. Whatever a man mixes his labour with is his to use. Or, at least, this was so in the primitive condition of human life in which there was enough for all and the whole earth was America. Locke sees that when men have multiplied and land has become scarce, rules are needed beyond those which the moral law or law of nature supplies. But the origin of government is traced not to this economic necessity but to another cause. The moral law is always valid, but it is not always kept. In the state of nature, all men equally have the right to punish transgressors civil society originates when, for the better administration of the law men agree to delegate this function to certain officers. Thus, government is instituted by a 'social contract its powers are limited, and they involve reciprocal obligations moreover they can be modified or reacinded by the authority which conferred them. Lockes theory is thus no more bistorical than the absolutism of Hobbes. It is a rendering of the facts of constitutional government in terms of thought, and or uno naces or communicational governments in terms or anought, and it served its purpose as a justification of the revolution settlement in accordance with the ideas of the time.

I DL 17 thep. 12, not. 5.

Locke a writings on economic subjects do not rank in importance Asceles writings on communic subjects to but rank in importance with his treatises on government. They deal with particular queswith the accuming on government. Anoy the main particular quan-tions raised by the necessities of the political situation. No attempt and yet been made to isolate the fact of wealth and make it the and you come manus to mounts the direction of industry and and one a special science. The curection of mountry and the soventeenth century it began to be carried out with loss the softeneesta century is began to be carried but with rose theoroughness than before and at the same time new problems were opened up by the growth of the national life. The American were opened up by the grown is the manden into anothers colonies, the enterprise of the East India company the planting common, she camerpane of two case mans company the panning of Ireland, the commercial rivalry with Holland and with France, or remain, one commercial rivalry with interest and with France, as well as questions regarding the rate of interest and the currency, as you as questions regarding the rate or interest and the currency, occupied the attention of a crowd of writers in the second half of complete the accounted of a grown of writers in the section cash of the century. Sir William Temple's curver had made him familiar to century for the main resolves curved that ments that samulation both of Holland and of Ireland, and with the common constitue could be received and of recent, and be wrote on both (1679 and 1673), praising highly the industrial ne struct on 10012 (1073 and 1073), parameter mighty too minimized methods of the Dutch. Sir Josiah Calid also, a great merchant methods of the Duken our susant cand area, a great mercoant who became chairman of the East India company admired the who because constraint to the land specially the low rate of interest commercial consumers or moment, specially one one rate or interest, so favourable to trader. This be thought, was the true cause of so revenues of the Dutch in like manner chesp money would the greatness of the Dotton in the manner cheep money would admitted the enterprise of English merchants, and be urged that aumunto the enterprise or cognize manufacts, and no urged that a low rate should be fixed by law. After the revolution, the a low rate anoma no mucu up may Amer one revolution, one economic policy of the whig House of Commons was criticised by economic point of the wang stooms of common was criticated by several writers of whom the most important were Charles Davenaut several writers or whom the inflavorant was the anthor of As Essay on and Sir Dunley North. Describes was the author of the Least India Frade (1897), besides other works, and North the Discourses upon Trade (109). They were not free traders wrose traces above aroses (1001) and and two two two seasons in the modern arms, but they argued against the restrictions and in the mourn some, but they argued against the restrictions and regulations adopted by the government for the encouragement of all the economists contemporary with Locks, Sir William otty was, in many ways, the most remarkable. Groundance out was in many says, one more remarkance. Culturariances and him acquainted with France, Helland and Ireland. He and any argument who remove, remain and remain the middled medicine in Holland in France he became intimate with

OR Omeringhous, Green's of Emplish Industry and Commerce, see, 200. See peer, abug. XII, so in Therefor writings.

Hobbes, an appointment as army physician in Ireland, under the lleutemant-governorship of Henry Gromwell, led to his undertaking the 'Down survey of forfelted lands, and thus determined both his own fortunes and the character of his literary work. His type of mind inclined him to experimental work and to the exact sciences, and, as experiment is seldom possible in aconomic affairs. he found a substitute for it in what is now called statistics. This he himself styled 'political arithmetic 'instead of using only comparative and superlative words, and intellectual arguments, he states his intention to consider only such causes as have visible foundations in nature, and to express himself 'in terms of number weight, or measure. Thus he adopted the quantitative method, and applied it to a variety of tonics. At the time, there were many complaints of national decay Britannia languens was vocal rents (it was said) were falling, money was acarce trades were disappearing the country was underpeopled and the people underemployed and overtaxed. Petty did not sympathise with these complaints he distrusted vague generalities. and saked for exact statements of the resources of England as compared with those of her rivals. The net results of his own enquiry into the matter are given in his Political Arithmetic. It was characteristic of Petty to look facts in the face, without being too much overswed by the prevalent assumptions of statesmen and men of business. He did not share the fears of the mercantillata regarding the danger of exporting the precious metals the country he thinks, is not always the poorer for having less money On the subject of money he gives two definitions which are worth quoting. Interest is a reward for forbearing the use of your own money for a term of time agreed upon similarly Exchange is local interest, or a reward for having your money at such a place where you most need the use of it. The sentence labour is the father and active principle of wealth, as lands are the mother occurs in his Treatise of Taxes. but is not introduced as original on the author's part.

Locks sown contributions to economics were occasioned by the financial problems which faced the new government after the revolution. His reflections on the rate of interest show the growing disfavour with which appeals for state interference were beginning to be met. He points out the obstacles to trade that are caused when the rate of interest is fixed by law and he argues in favour of freedom for what he calls, in words which suggest Adam Emith, 'the natural interest of money. Money 'turns the wheels of trade therefore its course should not be stopped. At the same time, be termore its course around not be stopped. At the same time, he holds no general brief against the interference of the state in noting no general print against the language of the mercantilists inations of commerce near is the anguage of the mercantinus foreign to him. Riches consist in plenty of gold and affect for these command all the conveniences of life. Now, 'in a country note commend an une conveniences of the Now, in a country not firmland with mines, there are but two ways of growing rich, any minimum with mines, there are only two ways or growing range children cooquest or commerce. For us commerce is the only way entor condemns the amaring politics of some late reigns and access convenies and amazing points or some rate tengors which had let in other competitors with us for the sea. In the where the result where compensations when the two seems and the correlations portion of Some Considerations, dealing with the correlations. ronoy Locke laid stress on the Importance of a uniform and stable nessure of raises four years later in his Further Consulerations, negative or raines nour years later in our rainer consensually be defended his view against the proposals involving a depreciation to ourosated mis view against see proposing investing a uspacement of the standard, which William Lowndes, accretary of the treatmy had set forth in An Essay for the amendment of the silver coins (1695)

Locko's plos for toleration in matters of belief has become MANUEL PICE for toperation in matters of occurs one occurs of the His Common Place Book shows that his mind was clear on the subject more than twenty years before the publication of on any suggest more than a weary years between the proposition of the first Letter. The topic, indeed, was in the air all through his life, ma area totaler the topic mores, was in the areas torongo ms mo and affected him nearly. When he was a scholar at Westminster and ancerou and nearly "such so was a scooler at resumment the powers of the civil magistrate in religious matters were the the powers at the cash anguarance in supports and the subject of heated discussion between presbyterians and independents in the assembly of divines that held its contons within percents in the assembly or unines then need the scheme when he entered Christ a stone s throw or mis commutory and, when he entered carrait Church, John Owen, a leader of the independents, had been country, som oven a namer of the interpretation, name near recently appointed to the densery. There had been many arguments for toleration before this time, but they had come arguments for interestion before this time, but they had come from the weaker party in the state. This Jeremy Taylor's from the weaker party in the state. Thus screeny laylors of Prophetying appeared in 1646, when the fortunes of Accord O Fromesgan appeared in 1940, when the continuous of the data afford a decline. For Own the credit is claimed as one may amore a accine for User use crous a common that he was the first who argued for televation when his party test no was the are called upon to preach before the Home and observed: He was ration upon to become notice one contract without on commons on or samenty rosts and bencemen one was stituous on or samenty rosts and bencemen on or samenty rosts and bencemen one of samenty rosts and bencement on the provinces of the provinc to the inhighed sermed be appended a remarkable discussion on to too promises sermon to appended a remarkance obsermed on toleration. Over did not take such high ground as Millen did, togranuo. Owen on the treate of Own Power in Eccleration ten years after m an arressuss of view avector in concessionation.

Consequently after that it is not lawful for any power on earth to compel in matters of religion. He abounds in distinctions, and compet in matters or reagion. Its accustors in unmancroose, and, indeed, his position calls for some subtlety. He holds that the IOUDDAY LIE PARAMETER OF THE PARAMETER O civil magistrate has duties to the church, and that he ought to give facilities and protection to its ministers, not merely as citizens, but as preachers of 'the truth', on the other hand he argues that civil or corporal penalties are inappropriate as punishments for offences which are purely spiritual. The position ultimately adopted by Locke is not altogether the same as this. He was never an ardent puritan he had as little taste for elaborate theologica as he had for scholastic systems of philosophy, and his carliest attempt at a theory of toleration was connected with the view that, in religion, articles in speculative opinions [should] be few and large, and ceremonies in worship few and easy. The doctrines which he held to be necessary for salvation would have seemed to John Owen a meagre and pittiful creed. And he had a narrower view also, of the functions of the state.

The bushness of laws is not to provide for the truth of opinions, but for the safety and security of the commonwealth, and of every particular man's goods and person. And so it sught to be. For truth certainly would do well security of the ware some left to shift for hexaelf. She solden has received, and if fear sever will receive, much ambitumes from the power of great men, to whom she is but rarely known, and more rarely vestomes. She is not taught by laws, nor has she say need of force, to precent see extrance into the studie of men. Errarel, indeed, powall by the sasistance of foreign and becovered seconds. But if fruth makes not her way into the understanding by her own light, the will be but the weaker for any borrowed force violence can add to her.

A church, according to Locke, is a free and voluntary society its purpose is the public worship of God the value of this worship depends on the faith that inspires it all the life and power of true religion consist in the inward and full persuasion of the mind and these matters are entirely outside the jurisdiction of the civil magistrate Locke, therefore, (to use later language) was a voluntary in religion, as he was an individualist on questions of state interference. There is an exception, however to his doctrine of the freedom of the individual in religious matters. The toleration extended to all others is denied to papirts and to atheists and his inconsistency in this respect, has been often and severely blamed. But it is clear that Locke made the exception not for religious reasons but on grounds of state policy He looked mon the Roman Catholic as dangerous to the public peace because he professed allegiance to a foreign prince and the atheist was excluded because, on Lockes view the existence of the state denends upon a contract, and the obligation of the contract, as of all moral law, depends upon the Divine will Lockes theological writings exhibit the characteristic qualities Acces a moneyeas withings cannot use the execution of which his other works have rendered familiar. The traditions of when me order much as the much as philosophical tradition was discarded in the Essay. He will search the Scriptures for was uncarried in the Dasay. He will scarce too examines to religious doctrine just as he turned to experience for his philosophy reageous docume just as no cumen to experience for ma framewhile and he follows a method equally straightforward. Locke does and the fundamental entrangent strangenterward. Locks open not raise questions of Biblical criticism, such as Hobbes had toy ruse questions of humani criticism, such as moores not already suggested and some of his own followers put forward soon arready suggested size some on the own industria puts for said second with the Christian faith, if without the fulness of current doctrina with the currents make, it without the latters of current cocurrent At the same time, his work belongs to the history of liberal As the same time, an work belongs to the matery of morate theology and was intimately connected with the delan which followed it treets religion like any other subject, and interprets comment to trems remotes mae any usuar surpres, and microscope the Bible like any other book and in his view of the nature of see nime may once noon and, in me vow or one manage or religion, he tends to describe it as if it consisted almost entirely in an attitude of intellectual belief—a tendency which became more prominent in the course of the eighteenth century

Locks a Thoughts concerning Education and his Conduct of Legaco a racepass concerning advancation and an economic of the Understanding occupy an important place in the history of the Understanding occupy an important frace in the matter of educational theory though only a scanty reference can be made concational theory through only a scartly returned can to mean to them here. The subject had a right to prominence in his to occur next. The stress he laid on experience in the growth of mind leading the stress no man on experience in the grown of manual led him to magnify perhaps overmuch, the power of education. He held that the minds of children [are] as easily turned, this the neutrons are minus of uniform (are) as enany surriso, on way or that, as water itself. He underrated imate differences

we are been with faculties and powers, capable almost of any we and noted what recursive and powers, capacite aimost or any thing but, as it is in the body so it is in the mind, practice tang but, as it is in the body so it is in the minu, precises it what it is. Along with this view went a profound makes it what it is a success with this view work a pressumm conviotion of the importance of education, and of the breadth of convocion or the importance of curcation, and or the oversion of its aim. It has to fit men for life—for the world, rather than for its aim, it mas to us used for more one over the met fit. It is cascottally a training of character

Locke had the gift of making philosophy speak the language of ordinary life. As a consequence his writings were followed by a orumny me. As a consequence, as witness were now we up a whole literature of attack and defence. Of his critics Stillingfleet wante mentator of access and decrease of the controllers of controllers. and his boacts acts quibjased on manh tierqs we are not rocke, as no rocke, and no lowers ages only about on many name we was not receive a formidable opponent, and equa: in intersection indices to the bows a manifestative opposition, and the difficulties in Locke's doctrine were present home by him with the direction in Locke's doctrine were present nome by min with no little power. Among Locke's other critics were John Sergeant which power, among secure of the function of the Idelete ?.

Henry Lee, William Sherlock, archbishop King, John Broughton, and Thomas Burnet (author of Sacra telluris theoria). Another Thomas Burnet, (audior of Sucora senara sacoras). Amount Thomas Burnet, of Kenmay, in Aberdoenshire, was the intermediary through whom Locke received the Reflections of Ledbnis upon the Essay The Nouveaux Essais of Leibols, in which the doctrines of the Reny were criticised, section by section, were ready for or the Descrip were contracted, so that owing to this event, pauscanou wash access some control, out, owing as an event, their appearance was postponed indefinitely. Amongst the writers who slided with Locks were Samuel Bold, Vincent Perronet, and who shou with harde were common hour, thecas retroites and Mrs Catherine Cockburn. Two other writers of the period deserve further mention on their own scooms. These are Richard runoggo ann John Rivitia. Burthoggo had no great reputation in his own day, and was almost entirely forgotten afterwards, till recent historians drow Burthogge and John Norris attention to his merits. His chief work, An Essay spore Reason and the Nature of Spirits, was published in 1894 and dedicated to Locke 'sa to a person schnowledged by all the learned world for one of the greatest masters of reason. But he cannot be counted either as a follower or as a critic of Locke. His characcounted cutter as a louwer or as a critic of Laza. The unstable teristic doctrines had been expressed in an earlier work, Organism refus et novem, published in 1678. He had come into contact, independently with the Certesian reform he was acquainted (though he did not sympathise) with the work of Malebranche and he may have been industried directly by Genilnox, who was lecturing in the university of Leyden when Burthogge studied medicine there and, in 1663, graduated M.D. Burthogge a object was to recordle the experimental or mechanical with the scholastic method. His most striking doctrine, however, concerns the submounous and sectioning theoretics, concerning the section of the section for the relativity of all knowledge. What Descartes and Locke had said relativity of all knowledge. of the secondary qualities is generalised. The understanding or the secondary quantities as generalized these are to it what colours are to the eye or sounds to the ear whole and part, substance and socident, cause and effect are but 'entities of reason conceived within the mind, and 'bave no more of any real research compounds without it, than colours have without the ere, or true existence without it, than colours have without the ere, or With this radical doctrine of relativity, Burthogge combined a neoplatonic metaphysic. He held that there is one spirit that actuates and acts in all, in men as well as in nature, and that the spirit of nature is not (as Henry More taught) an incorporeal substance, but simply the 'plastic faculty of the spirit of God.

John Norria, fellow of All Souls, and rector of Bemerton, was a man of much greater and more enduring reputation. He was also man or mucu greater and more construing representations are not made and a reliminous author of discourses, letters, and poems, as well as of a votaminum anticer of unsecuries, letters, and premis as well as of the longer and more systematic work on which his fame depends, the stage coveries the Theory of the Ideal or Intelligible World an many amounts use a nearly of one ances or ancesspace more the first part of which was published in 1701 and the second in toe mrs pers or which was published in 1701 and the second in 1704. In temper of mind, North may be regarded as the antithesis Ave. an temper of mind, Averas may be regarded as the anuncous of Locks. He represents mysilcism as against the latter's critical on Assas. But it would be a mistake to regard him as lacking in enjurication. Dut it would be a mistake to regard time as strengthed cleamons of logical faculty. He was diffuse, and his argument would cearness of operational reflection, or into verse but, from these digressions, he would return to the argument refreshed and ready to abide by its logic. Different as he is from Locke, both and ready to accuse by its logic. Different as no a from second combit the powerful influence that swept over European thought them the mind of Descartos. But Locke was critical of the more nomine of researce. Des reces was critically the mountainess of Descrites, whereas speculative elements in the paintenpay in presenting, single-specified west strongly to Norrise the course of his studies, especially in Plate and St Argentine, and the tone of his mind, made him welcome the speculative, if and the tone of an mind, made man welcome the spectrulure, it mystical development of Cartesianism due to Father Malebrancha. mynical, development of currenament due to rainer associations. Malebranche had a number of followers in England at this time mateuraneme man a number of thousands in sunfame as some some and we designations of the conference were a core approach in the logs but North was the only writer of note who adopted his year toos our morte was one only arrow or more and sampled ins your and on importance is one to me that one was in measured.

He had thought out—one may be had ilred mnower He man thought out—the may even my ne man aven— the theory for himself. In his work, he considers the ideal theory toe treery for numers. In this work, so considers the mean encory first, as it is in itself, and then, in its relation to our knowledge. may so to no in the out, and about in its remained to our absolutely.

He holds that the very matter or exercise of things (as distinguished the notes that the very nature or essences or tames (as caramguanous from their existence) are Divine ideas or degrees of being in the from some constances are some more or suggress or some in sec.

Of the natural and by the same theory he explains our perception Daytine mature. Somerally allowed that the things without in are not of things. The generally allowed that the things without in are not or tungs. In generally annuou that the tunings without he are not perceived immediately by themselves, but by their ideas. The only percentred minoculately by abad idoes, or what those ideas are | His answer Question is, but they are the Divine ideas, or in the words of Malebranche, that we see all things in God? Ideal or Intelligible World, vol. 1, p. 235.

CHAPTER XV

THE PROGRESS OF SCIENCE

With one or two exceptions—astronomy on the physical side, human anatomy on the biological—the reawakening in science lagged a century or more behind the reassence in literature and in art. What the leaders of thought and of practice in the arts of writing of pointing and of scripture in western Europe were effecting in the latter part of the fifteenth and throughout the sixteenth century began to be paralleled in the investigations of the physical laws of mature only at the end of the sixteenth century and throughout the first three quarters of the seventeenth.

Writing broadly, we may say that, during the Stewart time, the sciences, as we now class them, were slowly but surely separating themselves out from the general mass of learning, segregating into secondary muits, and, from a general ameligam of scientific knowledge, mathematics, astronomy physics, chemistry geology, unineralogy, noology botany, agriculture, even physiology (the off spring of anatomy and chemistry) were beginning to assert claims to individual and distinct existence. It was in the Stewart reigns that, in England at any rate, the specialist began to emerge from these who hitberto had 'taken all knowledge to be their 'province.'

Certain of the sciences, such as anatomy, physiology and, to a great extent, soclogy and botany had their inception in the art of medicina. But the last two owed much to the huntaman and the agriculturiat. During the preceding century, the great Relgian anatomist Vessilius had broken loose from the bond of the written word which had strangled research for a thousand years, and had looked at the structure of the human body for himself, he taught what he could show to his pupils. Under him, anatomy was the first of the natural sciences to break loose from the scholastic domination which had hitherto over phood authority above experiment.

As anatomy on the biological side, so astronomy on the physical,

led the way Copernicus had claimed that the sun was the oentro of our system but it was not until the following century centre or our spaces. One it was not must too following control, when the truth of his views was mathematically proved, that, first, when the trains of the rough at large, abandoned the views men or science, and, inter the suring at sures, suspensed the rices of Ptolemy which, like those of Artstotle, of Galen and of Hippocrates, had obsessed the learned world since classical times.

The great outburst of scientific enquiry which occurred during the serenteenth century was partly the rosult and partly the cause, of the invention of numerous new methods and imumerable new instruments, by the use of which advance in natural knowledge nor meruments, by the time of which surfaces in meterial answerings was immediately facilitated. Early in the century (1614), Napler of Merchiston had made known his discovery of logarithms, and logarithmic tables were first published in 1617 Seven years later the slide rule, which today plays a large part in physical and en gineering science, was invented by Edmund Gunter Decimals were Successive sections was investigated by sections of the sixteenth century algebra coming must use and, as the cases of the antecenth century algorithm as being written in the notation we still employ. William Gilbert, was ocus without in the nominous we same corpus. With the arperiments on the physician to queen Elizabeth, published his arperiments on payments to quoen estimated, produced the experiments of electricity and magnetism in the last year of the sixteenth century dealies was using his nearly constructed tolescope and, for the values was turned in newsy constituent tenescope are, not and first time, Jupiter's satellites, the mountains in the moon and mas une, copiers seconder, the mountains in the mountains and the fatheris rings were seen by human eye. The barumeter the cannot rings were seen by numer eye the currences we thermometer and the air pump, and, later the compound inferothermometer and use air pump, and must use compound under acope, all came into being at the earlier port of our period, and by scope, an came onto coming as any carrier part of our period, and on to use them. Pepys, in 1604, acquired a microscope and a serviceopa. For the first I did give him 45, 10, 0, a first price, but a most excises backle it is, and he may a good may the First price, but a most excises backle it is, and he says, as good, say the best he known in Depland. The other he gives ma, and is of raise; and a seen as above in Auguston. And waser the firm may and in curious surfacily it is a discover objects in a dark room with

Two years later on 19 August 1606 comes by agreement Mr. Recrea, bringing me a lantern —it must have been a magic lentern—with pictures in glass, to make strange things appear on

As we pass from Elizabethan to Stewart times, we pass in nost branches of literature, from men of genirs to men of talent, nose transition or members, man near or grants to make or tarout, clotter men, but not, to me a Germanium, spoch-making men. In cover men, one may a may a derinament, operationaling men in selence, however where England led the world, the descent became an ascent. We leave Dr Dee and Edward Kelly and we arrive at Harrey and Newton.

The gap between the medieval accesses which atill obtained in queen Elizabeth s time and the science of the Stewarts was bridged by Francis Bacon in a way, but only in a way. He was a reformer of the scientific method! He was no innovator in the inductive method others had preceded him, but he, from his great position, clearly pointed out that the writers and leaders of his time observed and recorded facts in favour of ideas other than those hitherto manctioned by anthority

Bacon left a heritage to English science. His writings and his thoughts are not always clear but he firmly held, and, with the authority which his personal eminence gave him, firmly proclaimed, that the careful and systematic investigation of natural phenomena and their accurate record would give to man a power in this world which, in his time, was hardly to be conceived. What he believed, what he preached, he did not practise. I only sound the clarion, but I enter not into the battle , and yet this is not wholly true. for, on a wintry March day 1626, in the neighbourhood of Barnet. he cannot the chill which ended his life while stuffing a fowl with mow, to see if cold would delay putrefaction. Harvey, who was working whilst Bacon was writing, said of him 'He writes philosophy like a Lord Chancellor This, perhaps, is true, but his writings show him a man, weak and pitiful in some respects. yet with an abiding hope, a sustained object in life, one who sought through evil days and in adverse conditions 'for the glory of God and the relief of man a estate.

Though Bacon did not make any one single advance in natural knowledge—though his precepts, as Whevell reminds us, are now practically uscless—yet he used his great talents, his high position, to enforce upon the world a new method of wreuching from nature her secrets and, with tireless patience and untiring passion, impressed upon his contemporaries the conviction that there was a new unexplored Kingdom of Knowledge within the reach and grasp of man, if he will be humble enough, and patient enough, and truthful enough to occupy it.

The most sublime of English poets survived into our period by a few years. A comparison between Dantes and Milton's great epics affords some indication of the advance in knowledge of this world and in the outlook on a future state which measures the progress made between the Middle Ages and the seventeenth century. As a poet (and, indeed, often in other activities of his life) Milton stood above, or at least, outside, the stream of tendency of the times through which he lived. Yet, in his poems (not in his political tractates—the most ephemeral of all literature) we see effects of the rising tide of science on literature.

¹ Of, as to Beens and the new method, unto vel, 17 pp. 278 f.

Alliton, one must never forget—and indeed, it is not easy to do solution, one mass herer surget—and smeets, as in some years, a schoolmaster. He took a view of his so-was, and whose years, a semonmaster the took a view of his profession which even now would be thought liberal he advocated processor successors and solution and solutions and solutions and solution and when are concurring or anouncing, agriculture and normication, and whose studying the last of these, remarked that it would be accomble to learn the use of the Glober and all the maps. Herbert of Cherbury be held that the student should acquire some narrous or construing no near time time structure and an acquire services and acquired services the seasons and how to manage a crudity Himself, a sufferer the sensons and now to maintge a crutiny. Illiment, a source of from gout, he learnt, at any rate, the leason of moderation. Mathematics, in bis curriculum, led to the instrumental science of naturements, in on curriculum, for to the marriagenia antene of Prificocometry and from thence to Fortification, Architecture, Enginery or Navigation.

At the time of the writing of Paradise Loss, the learned had at use time or the writing or carrows loss, the nathematical accepted no meany of coherences atmosph me manneautres. But prou anorum a tow years same by research was same same and the world at large still accepted the Ptolemale system a system the world at large sum accepted the renormal system, a system which, as a schoolmaster Milton taught. Mark Pattiton has pointed out that these two

Springs confront such other in the poem, in much the same relative position sprience confront each other in the poem, in much the same relative position which they occupied in the mind of the public. The ordinary habitant mode to be a produced by the product of the public o which they occupied in the mind of the public. The ordinary habitinal mode of speaking of calcular phenomena is Plokemia!; the conscious or dorifical exibosition of the same bismoonesse is Cobemican §

But the incompraity between these two statements is no greater Hat the meangranty between times two statements is no greater than will be found today in authors writing of subjects still said toni will be rouse tonicy in subjects writing or subjects still research that Alliton nerve saw either yance. Further we must not longer that annual never any enterer of his great cpies in writing or in print. His power of impressing or ma great clace in wining or in print. The power or impressing the visions on the world was, however such that Huxley held that his visions on the world was, however such that it have not the cosmogony of General but the cosmogony of Millon which had enthralled and mialed the world.

More distinctly than in his epics, Alliton, in his history showed Alore distinctly than in mis epics, Alliton, in his mistory showed a leaning to the scientific method. Firth has lately told us that this conclusions are roughly those of modern acholars, and his remoning concurson are roughly since on movern scanners, and and removing practically that of a scientific historian. In one respect, however practically teat of a screnismo manufacture. In one trajects, mowever, the was less than inkowarm. He had no sympathy with antiquarian no was seen than succeed at those who take pleasure to be all their lifetime raking the foundations of old abbeys and cathedrals. Million had visited Gallier.

¹ Mark Pattiern other Persolan Lock, Vo. 139—155; Inc. 430, 481. And yet, in 1829 800 CALL TITE, 17 129-140.

To turn to other evidence, the better diaries of any age afford us when faithfully written, as fair a clue as do the dramatists of the average intelligent man a attitude towards the general outlook of humanity on the problems of his age, as they presented them selves to society at large. The seventeenth century was unusually rich in volumes of autobiography and in diaries which the reading world will not readily let dia. Some account has been already given' of the autobiography of the complainant lord Herbert of Cherbury it is again noticed here as giving an interesting account of the education of a highly born youth at the end of the sixteenth and the beginning of the seventeenth century Lord Herbert seems to have had a fair knowledge of Latin and Greek and of logic when, in his thirteenth year he went up to University college. Oxford. Later he 'did attain the knowledge of the French. Italian and Spanish languages, and, also, learnt to sing his part at first sight in music and to play on the lute. He approved of so much lorde as to enable men to distinguish between truth and falsehood and help them to discover fallacies, sophisms and that which the schoolmen call victors arguments and this he considered, should be followed by some good sum of philosophy He held it also requisite to study geography, and this in no narrow sense, laying stress upon the methods of government, religious and manners of the several states as well as on their relationships tator se and their policies. Though he advocated an acquaintance with the use of the celestial globen' he did 'not conceive yet the knowledge of judicial astronomy so necessary, but only for general predictions, particular events being neither intended by nor collected out of the stars. Arithmetic and geometry he thought fit to learn, as being most useful for keeping accounts and en abling a gentleman to understand fortifications. Perhans the most characteristic feature of lord Herbert's acquirements was his knowledge of medicine and subjects allied thereto. He conceived it a fine study and worthy a gentleman to be a good botanic, that so he may know the nature of all herbs and plants. Further 'it will become a gentleman to have some know ledge in medecine, especially the diagnostic part, and be myed that a gentleman should know how to make medicines bimself. He gives us a list of the 'pharmacopacias and anechodalies which he has in his own library and certainly he had a knowledge of anatomy and of the healing art—he refers to a wound which penetrated to his father's pla mater a membrane for a mention I See exte, vol. ver, pp. 101_4 of which we abould look in rain among the records of modern ambassadors and gestlemen of the court. His knowledge, however was entirely empirical and founded on the writings of Paraceisms and was cuttrely curpriced and founded on the writings of raincement and his followers nevertheless, he prides himself on the cures he effected, and, if one can trust the reracity of so soil-satisfied an amateur physician, they certainly fall but little abort of the miraculous

John Evelyn, another example of a well-to-do and widely cultivated man of the world! was acquainted with several foreign languages, including Spanish and German, and took interest in hierogiphics. He studied medicine in 1645 at Padna, and there acquired those rare tables of veins and nerves which he afterwards gave to the Royal Society attended Le Felures course of chemistry at Paris in 1647 was skilled in more than one musical instrument, learned dancing and, above all, devoted himself to horticulture.

When travelling abroad, he made a point of visiting the cabinets of collectors, for at that time, public moreous, which, in fact, grew out of these cabinets, were non-existent. The follow ing quotation records the sort of curiosities at which men marrelled

Fab 4th. We ware invited to the collection of exotic ravities to the Fig. (in. 17c was invited to the sourcess at whose in the in answer of Ferdinands Imperal). A Napolitan nobleman, and one of the magning a furnishment imperial, a trasportion posteroise, and two or the most observable palaces in the city the repository of incomparable strikes. most operations passes as the coay was represently or accompanions occurs.

Amongst the natural herbide most remeriable was the Bysen marins and Amongs the natural service stock remarkance was the appear maxim arm.

Plant Sarriag the male and female combined; an Omeraidae; an etch-A sum success; our many and storage enterprises; an Americana, in section ordinary greats exceeding some of the Greates Assist, bold here for a great outnoy group extension places or the victories Abstract, note now for a group raily) likes he a stimuseder; the male and fronts likewood to be said. facility in the loss a statement of the man and semina accommodates we man thritty at helicy in the best, in was 'its reported the female both layer and named an interest in the needs to store to expected the instance contribute and interest and int hatches are egg; the canonications of man series; rapyros mone or several reades, and some of either faibles of the rinds of trees written with Japonic reades, and some of either takes of the rinds of trees written with deposite characters; another of the immediac of pairs; many Indian further a skyrotel that had a quantity of sarcorgandous water within its sarriy; a Parish, and the sarriy of the sarriy; a Parish water within the sarriy; a Parish water w earphal test and a quantity or narrougeness; where within no surrey; a provi-fied distory not; divers notic of farmining, being a monstrone spider with test these alease, and attraveled began.

But Erelyn a chief contribution to acience, as already indicated, was horicultural. He was devoted to his garden, and, both at his native Wotton, and, later at Sayos court, Deputord, spent much time in planting and planning landscape gardens, then much the fathion.

In the middle of the sixteenth century the fact that nitre promoted the growth of plants was beginning to be recognised Sir Kenejin Dight and the hound Oxonian Youn Nation exheli-bomoren me known or beams was reforming on ne recommend cur Actions 10507 and the Joseph Comments when Action capes, monted de Sal-Nutro and, in 1675, Erolyn writes I firmly moneous we occurrence analy as 100 as proving without the plenty we should petions that where surpress can be obscured in premy so smuon not need to find other composts to ameliorate our ground. His well known Sylves, published in 1884 had an immediate and a widespread effect, and was, for many years, the standard book on the subject of the culture of trees. It is held to be responsible for a great outbreak of tree-planting. The introduction to Nitbet's edition gives figures which demonstrate the shortage in the available supply of oak timber during the seventeenth century. The charm of Evelyn's style and the practical nature of his book, which ran into four editions before the author's death, arrested this decline ('be are sticking in a tree it will be growing. Jock, when ye re sleeping as the laird of Dumbiedykos counselled his son), and to the Spikes of John Evelyn's largely due the fact that the oaken timber used for the British ships which fought the French in the eighteenth century sufficed, but barely sufficed, for the national needs.

Pepys1 whose palve and frank self revelations have made him the most popular and the most frequently read of disrists, was not quite of the same class of student to which lord Herbert of Cherbury or John Evelyn belonged. But, gifted as he was with an undying and insatiable cariculty nothing was too trivial or too odd for his notice and his record and, being an exceptionally able and hard working government servant, he took great interest in anything which was likely to affect the navy He discoursed with the ingenious Dr Kuffler about his design to blow up shins, noticed the strange nature of the sea water in a dark night, that it seemed like fire upon every stroke of the oar -an effect due, of course to phosphorescent organisms floating near the surface—and interested himself incomantly in marine matters. His troubled evesight and his love of music account for the attention he paid to optical appliances, the structure of the eye, musical instruments of every kind and musical notation for this last, he seems to have invented a system which is still preserved at Mardalene college, but which no one now understands.

Physiology and mortuary objects had, for him, an interest which was almost morbid. He is told that negroes drounded look white, and lose their blackness, which I nerve heard before, describes how 'one of a great family was hanged with a silken halter of his own preparing, not for the heacest only but because it stranged more quickly. He attended regularly the early meetings of the Royal Society at Greakam college, and showed the livallest interest in various investigations on the transfusion of blood, repliration under reduced air pressure and many other ingusious experiments and observations by Sir George Ent and others. On 20 January ant ouser rations of oir opening out and others. On so sample, 1665, he took home Micrographia, Hooke a book on microscopy—

Although Pepps had no scientific training—he only began to cann the multiplication table when he was in his thirtieth year but, later took the keenest pleasure in teaching it to Mrs Peppsout, and to not up scenes pressure in tenening it to any repre-he, nevertheless, attained to the presidentiality of the Royal Society. ne, never menus, attained to the company of the virtueses and, in no mu asways ucuspaneu in une company or one virtues and, in 1063, three years after he began to study arithmetic, he was admitted a follow of their—the Royal—Society In 1681 he was educated a remain or mention to any gentles for actence, or to any great invention or generalisation, but to his very an or to any great invention or generalization, but to one very or ceptional powers as an organizer and as a man of business, to his expenses powers as an organism and as a man or outsides, or me integrity and to the abiding interest he ever showed in the came

If we pass from the interest taken in scientific progress by men of superior intelligence to the obstacles opposed to it by popular or superior microgeness to the observer observer on it of belower long lived crew of witches, winards and alchemists. It is often said that the more rationalistic outlook of the accontent due to Hobbes and others, did much to discredit these practitioners. But the observant dwallers in our cities or remote country villages, not the observation transfers in our cases or remote country images, practiced as they are with advantagments of those who practise palmistry and of those who predict the future by crystal garing or by the fall of sand of followers of the shorting incoperor up the sam or same, or nonowers or one spensing proposed, and of far more presumptuous and more dangerous impostors, ant or ter more presumptuous and more oungerous impostors, or confronted by the effect, indomitable belief of the runtic in or commonses by the smeath material two period on the runne in the witchery of his accordors, may well hold the opinion that the to witcomy or me autorous, may sent more the opening sense and tock of superstition is a constant stock and permeates now as it and of superstance as a constant same and permanent as a side in Elizabeth's time, every class of society. What improvement there was in the seventeenth century and it is extremely doubtful there was in too seventeeous century and it is exacted you contain the in the sevent of James I and if there was much, was largely due to the advent of James I and a term was mount and sarged use to the surveys of source a same the later rise of puritarism, associated as they were with the most one and nost inhuman forture of sorcerors. When the alchemist crues and more minimum to race or softening as a softening of a softening as a softening or a warlock be pansed before publicly embarking on the trada

Under the Tudors, the laws against witchcraft were milder than those of other countries, but, under James I, those laws were trues or outer countries, one outer sames i, times have series repealed and he himself took—as he had done before in Scotland represent any no minimum possessarios no man umpo occure un occusantemento part in this cruel and semeloss persecution. During the an acure pass in the accententh centery no less than 70 000 men and romen are said to have been executed for alleged offences

Witches, Astrologers and Alchemists 357

under the new act. The king even wrote a book on demonology stracking the more sensible and reasonable views of Scot and Wher II must be remembered, however that, in these times, the generality of learned and able men believed in the malefacent effects of sorrery and the black art. The bench of bishops and the bench of judges alike took part in what seems to us a bideous and wanton brutality. Even so great a writer as Sir Thomas Browne, who tells us, 'for the serrows of others be has quick sympathy, gave evidence squarts two unhappy women charged before Sir Matthew Hale at Bury St Edmunda, and his evidence helped to secure their infquitous conviction.

Browne, like many of his day was a firm believer in boroscopes—
Browne, like many of his day was a firm believer in boroscopes—
I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me. He was, however perhaps a little in advance of some of his contemporaries at any rate, he recognised that forestellings based on star-garing do not always make good. We deny not the influence of the stars but often suspect the due application thereof. During the civil war, both sides used astrologers and acted on their prognostications but, on the whole, the firm belief that foture creats could be foresteld by a study of the planetary system was waining.
'They (i.e. the stars)
'Incline but do not compel—and so gently incline that a wise man may resist them septims dominability astrus; they rule but God rules them! This was said by Robert Burton, and it probably represents the average opinion of the more educated in our period.

The part played by alchemy in the life of the times can be judged by Ben Jonson's Alchemus, first acted in 1010², which affords a true insight into the flablouable crare of the time. The play was constantly presented from that date until the closing of the theatres and, on the restoration, was one of the first plays to be revived. Jonson certainly had mastered the largen of this form of quackery and showed a predound knowledge of the art of its professors. In Epicocae, or the Silent Women, he refers to the love phillres of one Forman, a most fagrant rescal who was mixed up with the Overbury trial.

It has been said that a competent man of science should be able to put into language understanded of the people any problem, no matter how complex, at which he is working. This seems bardly possible in the twentieth century. To explain to a trainfed histologist double θ functions or to a skilled mathematician the intricacies of audice o introduction or to a aximo matocaratican are majorates or knypothesis would take a very long time. The introduction in all and value are would have a very some sum. The material and the actences of technical words is not due to any spirit of per are success on the part of modern squarts these terms, long as they minally are series as the shorthand of science. In the Stowart thing, however an investigator could explain in simple language to his friends what he was doing and the advance of natural science was keenly followed by all sorts and conditions of men.

I Annimy of Malcockety part I, see, 11, Mars. 1, see, 17 I C. and, 701. 71, they. I, pp. 25-42.

Whatever were the political and moral deficiencies of the Stewart kings, no one of them lacked intelligence in things artifule and acientific. The pictures at Windsor and at Buckingham palace which the nation ower to Charles I and Charles II are only annual two mattern owns to the knowledge and taste of queen approximate of those is these in the situations are tosse or down ratory under his closet, a pretty place; and was working there but ratery unter the closes, a pretty placer and was working since out and of two before his death, his fillness districtioning him for his a cay we and occure me occurs me more managing one to me 11 May 1663, Pierce, the surgeon, tells Pepps that the other day It may 1000, recree, the surgeon, term represents the other way.

The clarke and he did dissect two bodies, a man and a woman Let the King with which the King was highly pleased. Pepps and of the state o and records, 1/ represent 1000/2, on the amounty or reversely lickering, another story of a dissection in the royal closest by the king's own hands.

king a own masses.

It has, I think, seldem been pointed out that Charles II's anoestry accounts for many of his qualities and especially for his ancestry accounts for many or me quanters and especially for his inferest in science. He was very milke his father but his mother more an exercise. He was very minute the state of the monotone was the daughter of a Modiel princess, and the characteristics of was toe transport to a around princes, and toe custocterates of that family are strongly marked in the morry monarch. His galety tast manny are arrangly marked in the money monature and saled wit and his skill in money matters when he chose to apply and wit and an actu in money nations when he choose to apply himself, all bring to mind the Italian family from which he strange ment, at terms to main the trainin mainty from which be sprang.

Another royal personage, prince Rupert, full of spirit and Another royal personage, prince super, into or spirit and action, full of observation and judgement, about this time invented acron, run or occurration and judgement, across some some interested his chemical glasses which break all to dust by breaking off a his chemical grames which is a great mystery to me? He had,

Pays, 13 Jan. 1982.

From the swarting complexion of Charles II was probably due to his Indian blood. Even the security completion of Charles II was possibly due to his Italian blood, the fundame for outdoor sports is another tests which is often element in the security of the completion of th and his fundament of outdoor sports is another into whom is come absenced in the Market demands. There is no old separating of a Portical of Learning of 1840, the contract of Media Caranthus. There is an old separing of a Portical of Lemma 86, 1842, the broken of Occine II, which shows an assembling measurement of Carrier III and the Carri the brether of Occine II, which above to automaking remarkation to Coaries III and it is to convertige to remarker that Coaries II according to the date of the first that is the prefitted. il is followed by the companion that the control of states of the property of the companion of potiently by his secreptions mescriptoment. Projection and support of Galains, who was a large to birn the apportantly and masses of making his factors activated all flavore in a large to the large activational discoveries.

Worcester Kenelm Digby Wallis 359

says Gramont, quelques talens for chemistry and invented a new method for making gunpowder for making halfs hot and for boring cannon. His traditional invention of the aimost lost art of memoriat is probably due to the fact that, at an early date, the real inventor Ladwig von Siegen, explained to him his process and that prince Ropert demonstrated with his own hands this new method of energying to Evelyn.

Another aristocratic inventor Edward Somerset, second marquis of Worcester, has received more crofit than he deserved. He was interested in mechanics and employed a skilled mechanician, one Kaltoff, in his laboratory but his claims to have invented a steamengine do not bear critical investigation, and his well known Century of Incentious does not rise to the level of The Boy's Own Book of the last century Many of his suggestions, though ingenious, are based on fullscies, and comparatively few of them were practical.

A curlously versatile amateur in science was Sir Kenelm Digby, of whom mention has already been made elsewhere! Like most prominent men of his time, he intervened in theological questions. besides playing an active part in public affairs. He was an original member of the Royal Society but, although he is reported to have been the first to record the importance of the vital air --we now call it oxygen—to plants, and although he had gifts of observation. his work lay largely in the paths of alchemy and astrology and he seems to have had recourse to a lively imagination in catimating the results of his experiments. He trafficked in the transmutation of metals, and his name was long associated with a certain 'nowder of sympathy which like the absent treatment of the twentieth century practitioners of Christian science, acted at a distance. Evelyn looked on him as a quack, a teller of strange things, and lady Familiawe refers to his infirmity of lying , he was certainly a great talker Bill, other men of his epoch spoke well of him and his conversation was doubtless stimulating if profuse.

In mathematics, John Wallis was to some extent, a forerunner of Newton. At Feliated school and at Emmanuel college, he received the curiously wide education of his age. He was a skilled linguist although he had taken holy orders, he was the first of Francia (Biscova popula to proclaim in public Harreys a discovery of the circulation of the blood, but his bent was towards mathematics, and he possessed an extraordinary memory for figures. His Arithmetica Infinitories is described as the most stimulating mathematical work so far published in England. It contained the germs of the differential calculus and it suggested to heaten who forms or the uncerement careering and is suggested to restore who were the binomial theorem. In it was evaluated, and it must not be forgotten that to Wallis we owe the symbol for and is notice the surgician times to realize we one the symbol refinity to . Living in troublesome times, under many rulers, he connamely so carring in account names, and are many rulers, no contribut, not without some loss of popularity to remain on good terms trirot, nor without mane loss of popularity to remain on good turns with all. His services were, indeed, indispensable to a succession of governments, for he had a power of deciphering which was or governments, for no take a power or desipations which was almost miraculous. Cromwell, who seems to have had a great respect for his powers, appointed him Savilian professor of geometry at Oxford in 1649.

Another mathematical occlesiastic was Seth Ward, bishop of Exister and afterwards of Solisbury Ward was educated at Glidney Somex college and in 1643, was chosen as mathematical lecturer to the university at Cambridge. But like Wallis, he assurer to an university as Commontage, Duty has insured an as appointed, and in the same year to a Sarilian professor. was appendict, and in the same jets to a current processor, and afternoonly—another instance, not uncommon at anth time of men educated at Cambridge but recognised and the time, or men concated at Campanings was recognized and promoted at Oxford. He took the place of the decied John Greates who magnanimonally used his influence in his successor's Ureaves, who magnanimously used his induction in this accountries. Ward was renowned as a preaction but his later fame. natour plant was reconsider as a pressurer out the safe rate rame rested chiefly on his contributions to the science of astronomy and he is remembered in the world of science mainly for his theory of the an investment in the average of security for the interest of the attack particus; mounts, vi arts and vi ante-out site pursues of the states. Pad bare Hobber's attempted proof of the sequering of the circle there was also a little confrorersy on the aquaring or the cube, and mixed up with these criticisms in the cupucation of the cream, were political motives. Hobber had not realm of pure reason were political motives. Hopkes had not begun to study Encild until he was forty and after Str Henry Saylle had founded his professorables at Oxford, Wood says that carno man nomino ma protessorampa as Unioru, proof says man not a few of the foolish gentry kept back their soms in order not not a low or the nominal growny aspected with some in order me to have them smutted by the black art —so great was the fear to make more summer of the powers of mathematics. Ward was a and the Russiance in the powers of mannermatics. Ward was a plurallst, as was the manner of the times, and Burnet (ells in he pursuit, as was use manner or the times and thereto vous as no vers a profound statemen but a very indifferent clergyman. Yet, what money he got he lavishly spout on ecclesiastical and other Dur_{Dougs} 2

At history of Finder, he restored, at the east of £25,000, the subsected reported As Water or Brates he material, at the next of £35,000, the substituting repetited phases accordingly increased the trains of the power bootless of his discuss and the patient; consistently increased the raise of the power bundless of the discuss and of the probability of the substitution of the probabilist of his multi-dual; and gave a considerable rate of money lowers to the course of making the three novigable from his artisted city to the same. He founded the course, the course of the course o out of making the three newlyshie from his actionist city to the sam. He demands the fact, Word absolutement at Satisfacty and he gave sectate forms and the dates rated for scientife of Christ soliege, Cambridge

Like the distinguished mathematicians just mentioned, Isnac Newton took a keep interest in certain forms of theology current in his day, but in his intellectual powers he surpossed not only them but all living mathematicians and those who lived after him. His supreme genius has ensured him a place in the very small list of the world's thinkers of the first order. He, too, exercised a certain influence in affairs, and, during his later years, he took a keen interest in theological speculations but his activities in these fields are completely overshadowed by the far reaching importance of his great discoveries as a natural philosopher and a mathematician. As the discoverer of the decomposition of white light in the spectrum, he may be recarded as the founder of the modern eclence of ontics. His discovery of the law of gravitation, and his application of it to the explanation of Keplers laws of planetary motion and of the principal inequalities in the orbital motion of the moon made him the founder of the science of gravitational astronomy. His discovery of the method of fluxious entitles him to rank with Lellinia as one of the founders of mathematical analysis. All these great discoveries gave rise to long and sometimes acrimonious controversies among his contemporaries, relating both to the ambiects themselves and to priority of discovery. In a letter to Halley referring to one of these disputes. Newton writes Philosophy is such an importinently liligious lady that a man has as good be sugged in lawsuits, as have to do with her I found it so formerly, and now I am no somer come such her again, but she gives me warning.

His chief work, Prescepia, has been described by dean Peacock as the greatest single triumph of the human mind¹

The second man of outstanding genius in British science in the seventeenth century was Harvoy who, like howton, worked in one of the two sciences which, in Stewart times, were, to some extent, shead of all the others. Harvoy, 'the little cholerie man as Aubrey calls him, was educated at Cambridge and at Fadua and was in his thirty-eighth year when, in his lectures on anatomy he expounded his new doctrine of the circulation of the blood to the college of Physicians, although his Exercitatio on this subject did not appear till 1628. His notes for the lectures are now in the British Museum. He was physician to Charles I and it is on record how during the battle of Edgehil, he looked after the young princes as he sat reading a book under a hedge a little removed from the fight.

In the chain of evidence of his convincing demonstration of the circulation of the blood, one link, only to be supplied by the invention of the compound microscope, was missing. This, the discovery of the capillaries, was due to Malpighl, who was amongst the earliest anatomists to apply the compound microscope to animal tissues. Still as Dryden has it.

The circling streams once thought but pools of blood— (Whether Bir's feel or the body's feed), From dark children Harrey's name shall save!

Harvey was happy in two respects as regards his discovery It was, in the main and especially in England, recognised as proven in his own lifetime, and, again, no one of credit claimed or assented the claim of others to priority. In research, all enquirers stand on steps others have built up but, in this, the most important of single contributions to psystology the credit is Harvey's and almost Harvey's alone. His other great work, Eccertifationes de Generalione Anisalmen, in of secondary importance. It shows marrelloss powers of observations and very laboritous research but, although, to a great satent, it led the way in embryology it was shortly supermeded by works of those who had the compound inference on their command. Cowley a man of wide culture, wrote an Ode on Heavey in which his activerences was contrasted with a falling common to scientific men of his own time, and, so far as we can see, of all time.

Horwey cought for Treath in Treaths over Hook.
The Creatures, which by God Hilmself was write
And wisely thought thrus fit,
Net to read Comments only trees it,
But on the 'entire and the self to hook.
Mathias in Ant great Cross, others shared Look't my issystem Head in Head,
Every one loods as he is fored,
The same head as he is freed,
All the mate have path they freed,
All the mate have path they freed,
He defined the Hood confirth in wit,
He defined the Hood confirth in wit,
He sold for look of the Hood, had been untrodes yet.

Harvey's death is recorded in a characteristic seventeenth century sentence, taken from the unpublished pages of Baldwin Harvey's Bustorum Aliquot Reliquing

Of William Harroy the most farturate analouds, the blood crossed to more as the third say of the Lies of June, in the year 165° the southmost movement of which is all more, movement he had most truly amounted

[&]quot;Es er spony whree mi be wise spone?"

² Ephele to Dr Charleton.

⁹ The order is indicited for this quotation to De Roeman Moore's History of the "suby of Maderice in the British Islan, Oxford, 1908.

Among other great physiologists and physicians, Sir Theodore Turquet de Mayerne (godson of Theodore Bera), who settled in London in 1011 has left us Notes of the discusses of the great which, to the medically minded, are of the greatest interest. He almost diagnosed enteric, and his observations on the fatal illness of Henry prince of Wales, and the memoir he drew up in 1623 on the health of James I, alike leave little to be desired in completances or in accuracy of detail.

Before bringing to a close these short notices of those who studied and wrote on the human body whole or diseased, a few lines must be given to John Mayow of Oxford, who followed the law especially in the summer time at Bath. Yet, from his contributions to actence, one might well suppose that he had devoted his whole time to research in chemistry and physiology. He it was who showed that, in respiration, not the whole air but a part only of the air breathed in takes an active part in respiration, though he called this part by a different name, he meant what we now call oxyven.

Thomas Bydenham was one of the first physicians who was convinced of the importance of constant and prolonged observation at the bedside of the patient. He passed by all anthonity but one—the divine old man Hippocrates, whose medicine rested also on observation. He, first in England, attempted to arrive at general laws about the prevalence and the course and the treatment of disease from clinical observation. He was essentially a physician occupied in diagnosis, treatment and prognosis. When he was but 25 years old, he began to suffer from gout, and his personal experience enabled him to write a classic on this disease, which is even now unsuressed.

Francis Glisson, like Sydenham, was essentially English in his upbringing, and did not owe anything to fareign education. His work on the liver has made Glissons expands known to every medical student, and he wrote an authoritative book on rickets. He, like Harvey was educated at Gonville and Caius college, and, in 1636, became region professor of physic at Cambridge, but the greater part of his life he spent at Colchester. We must perforce pass by the fashforable Thomas Willis and his more capable sawistant Richard Lower with Sir George Ent, and others.

Great as were the seventeenth century philosophers in the biological and medical sciences, they were paralleled if not surpassed by workers on the physical and mathematical side. Robert Boyle was, even as a boy of eighteen, one of the leaders in the comparatively new pursuit of experimental science Identifies in the comparatively new pursuit or experimental actendary.

¹ France, Ely Michael, The History of Physiology Combridge, 1901.

Vulcan has so transported and the first tore was communally visions has an insurprotect and bewritched me as to make me fancy my inhoratory a kind of Estatem thus he wrote in 1649. A few years later (1632-3), in Layrium, time no wrote in 103K. A few yours mater (11003-0), in Ireland, where he was called to look after the family estates, he found it hard to have any Hermetic thoughts, and occupied his nome is nare to make any morning thousand, and occupace and mind with anatomy and confirming Harroy's discovery of the care later he settled at Oxford, where carcumstant of the operatory and had as aminant Robert Hooks. the armogen a movementy and mad as amounts moves moved. Meetings were held alternately at Boyles lodgings and at John ofecures were nero atternately as course suggings and as some Wilking's lodge at Wadham, and were frequented by Seth Ward and Christopher Wren and by many others.

Stimulated by Otto von Guericke a contrivance for exhausting Stimushed by Otto for vitericae's constituted for consuming air from a rossel, Boyle, aided by Hooke, invented what was called are from a reason, hoppe, and by mouse, inventor what was canced the machina Boyliana, which comprised the essentials of the airthe assential polymens, which comprised the essentials of the appearance of today. At this time, Boyle build himself with the solgher with the presents and with the elected of air—the part sugue, with the prostation and in accounties. Like Newton, he took a to prayer in respiration and in accountry. These frowning we town in computeress in secondly and not only speak communitative same and translating the Hible into foreign torques, but learnt Greek, Helmen transming the nines into surveys tongues, one remain troops, account for an and Chaldee so that he might read it at first hand. He Syriao and Gasores so that no migor read it at not manu. He says indeed a very notable character. Suffering under continued was, moscu, a very notative transaction. Suitesting under constitution [iii-bealth, with weak eyes, a slight stammer and a memory in-nontin, when work crysts, a sugar maximum and a memory treacherous to the last degree, he was yet one of the most helpful trencuerous to one case outstrop, no was yes one or one more neglant of friends and universally popular alike at the court of three or increase and universally pupular sales at the court or turce idegs, and in the acciety of men of lotters, men of business and angs, and in the society of men of sources, men of someone and men of science. In spite of the fact that he was the first to men or surence. In space or see men, no was the unst to distinguish a mixture from a compound, to define an element, to caringuan a mixine from a compound, so come an escenari, to prepare hydrogen, though he did not recognise its nature, be had prepare nyuroges, usuagu no um nos recognase na nature, see nad in him the touch of an amateur but an amateur of gentra. His in him the touch or an american out an american or genuer. And discoveries to mear unumasticate.

It was men such as these that reestablished the Royal Society It was more small as success ones recommended the myst concery in 1660. Exactly a contary earlier the first admittle society the in 1000, chacup a contain on the me mean machine routing too Accuments occretives around the respect ment are origin. The followed by several others, most of them but shortlived, in was innowed by soveral outers, more in ment out societives, in Italy and in France. Among Eoglish or Teutonio folk, the Royal laif and in France. Among Acquisit or routemanding two mayar Boolety was the earliest to appear and, even if we include the acientific accieties of the world, it has had the most continuous action accounts at the worth, to man must the mans communities caristenes. Indeed, before its birth, it underwort a long period of constants, and its inception was in reality in 1646. At that date, a society known as the Philosophical, or as Boyle called it, the

'Invisible, college came into being, which met from time to time at Gresham college and elsewhere in London. During the civil war, this society was split in two, some members meeting in London, some at Oxford, but the meetings, wher wor held, were at irregular intervals. On the restoration, the meetings were resumed in London and, in 1682, the society received the royal charter

Of all the poets of the time, Cowley took, perhaps, the greatest interest in science. He had, indeed, like Evelyn and at about the same date, developed a plan for the institution of a college of science. Evelyn explains his scheme in a letter addressed to Hobert Boyle, dated 3 September 1659 from Saves court, which contains minute details as to the buildings, the maintenance, and the government of his college, the inmates of which were to 'preserve science and cultivate themselves. Cowley's scheme was also elaborately thought out, and had the original and admirable suggestion that, out of the twenty salaried professors, sixteen should be always resident and four always travelling in the four quarters of the world, in order that they might give a constant account of all things that belong to the learning and especially Natural Experimental Philosophy of those parts. To his 'Philosonlical Colledge was to be attached a school of two hundred born. Both these schemes, according to bishop Sprat, hastened the foundation of the Royal Society, of which both projectors were original members.

Cowley's possus were greatly admired during his lifetime, intercritics have considered him affected, perhaps became, like Donne, he understood, and was not afraid to use the technical language of the achools. We have quoted some of his lines on Harrey and may add a few from the ods with which he greeted the hirth of the Royal Society

From all long Errors at the way
In which our Franchesomes wrote,
And Rhe 1bt and Hebrerer many pases did stray
In Describ but of small extent, Buton, Rhe Moses, had as forth at had
The herrar Whileresse he paset,
Did on the very Border stand
Of the helset presented Land,
And from the Monesthan Top of the Exalted Wit, Saw 1b linearity, and showed us it.
But Life 35d never to see Min allow These to Resour Worklas, and Conquer tos; Nor can so thart a Line sufficient by
To fadress the way derbies of Konnes Bra.

The work he did we could be admire, and were amount it we should more require and were anjone it we should more require From his few years, divided white th Excess Of low Affletion, and high Happiness. Or who on things remote can fix his sight, That's alwayse in a Triumple, or a Fight?

Donne, who, like Cowley indulged in quaint poetical cone notice, and the country manifest in domin because one and was rounned a new source or proof, anyming community ventions and clearical characters, and treating of topics and object and ob of overyday life, was not afraid of realism. Upon common object on overytasy mit, was mit sairand of reminent. Open common outers.

Dr. Johnson fells us, he was unnecessarily and unpoetically subtle Space limits us to one quotation Marks but this fice, and marks in this, How Bittle that which then deny it me let It special me first, and now specia thee, And in this flee, our two bloods mingled bea.

Donne did not of course foresee the appailing part that these insects, by the habits he mentions, play in the spread of such diseases as bubonic plague and many episootics in animals.

Described passing and many spaceces in minutes.

The dramatists of the Sievart period hardly afford in the help are need in estimating the position occupied by science and by men we need in communing the position orange of science in the world of the sorenteenth centry. The astrologic or manager in the work of the stock characters of the drama of and the admental were such as a company promoter is now. The Gentlemen of Trinity Colledge presented before the King's Majesty a men of thing courses presented the range majority a comedy entitled Albumorary which takes its name from the chief concery entitied Alexanders a very arrant knews, and the type of the carranter an assumable a very account analyst and the type or one false man of accoon. This play, originally printed in 1615 721 2000 time man or succeed. Anne past, commany printed in 1010 was not forgotten, but it was revived in 1888 and met with great success. Sound Butler who was not a follow of the Royal Society for come reason difficult to explain, spent much time in attacking it. some reason mineral to expean, spent mann time in account in the wrote his contextaining satire on the curious cutilled The to wrote the Moon in short verse, and was so pleased with occusions we see access in some verse, man was no premier when it that he wrote it over again in long verse. Though this Satire to the stop of the second seco alam me muyat reactory removes a magnetic curvigin or it is extense to show Butler did not appreciate what even in those days is not to anow nature that are appreciated are even in section to subject and awaya siprocissicu, usas uro minuto investigacion ut sutrocce and objects which to the ordinary man seem trivial and vain often load to discoveries of the profoundest import to manifold

Ben Jones, with his fair for presenting what scologists call (Tpo species, showed, as has been seen, in his Alchemist an unusual, but a thorough, mastery of the half scientific and ball quack jargon of the craft, so that this play is a quarry for all interested in the history of chemical and physical studies. To the play writer of the time, the man of science or of pseudoscience was a vague, peerlah pedant, much occupied with physicgoomles, dreams and fantastic idees as to the properties and powers of various substances. But there seems to have been a clear distinction drawn between a real and a false astrology as is shown in Dryden's An Evening's Love (1668)1

The political economists of the seventeenth century

were greatly influenced by the Baconina enthusiann for empirical sindy; they were easier to accumulate and interpret facts, and to apply inductive mery were easier to accommand and interprets more, and us appear interactive methods to political phenomena. They threefore concerned themselves with the anatomy of the body politic, and with sumerical observations which use accounty or the body pount, and with numerical conservations which served to the best available substitute for experiment. They followed the mercus as the present subserving nor experiments. Along tonorwest the mathematical science of their mathematical science of their making or the monogena reason that as a loss affinity with that which has day bence, their mode of thought has a close affinity with that which has one I memory some mercus on those gas has a some amounty with these where the become surrent about the decline of the classical school of Political Economy's

Sir William Potty and the philosopher Locke are the best known names in this group of political economists. Locks, in particular, was interested in questions concerning the currency and the rate of interest. Sir William Petty who was among the first to state clearly the nature of rent, wrote a celebrated Treatise Q Taxes and Contributions Captain John Graunt s Natural and Political Observations marked the beginning of that interest i statistical data concerning health and population which is a di thugushing feature of modern economic research. Another write Samuel Fortrey followed Petty in his endeavour to go behind t mere art of taxation and smaller the ultimate sources of mailor wealth in the land and labour of the country In general, it m be said that, in the seventeenth century political economy was a an art rather than a science. Between these writings and Ad Smith's Wealth of Nations (1776), there was a great gap but practical observations of the seventeenth century were not will use in supplying material for his scholarly and impartial analy

Oceaningham, Growth of English Industry and Commerce, vol. 21, y. $20. 1 Of sector, educate in

CZ. exit, che h. xxv

OHAPTER XVI

THE ESSAY AND THE BEGINNING OF MODERN

PRINTARE the most important literary achievement that fall Andreary and most important interary accordances and has within the period covered by this rolume is the creation of a proce which, in structure II not in rocabulary is essentially the ayer, muce, in structure it are in recovering as casemany are game as that of today Caroline prose, the prose of Milton and Taylor of Browne and Clarendon, had produced in the hands of genius, some of the noblest passages in our literature. But, at the reatoration, men began to feel the need of an instrument upon which the ereryday performer might play—an instrument suited to an age of reason, possessing, before all things, the homely virtues of simplicity correctness, juddity and precision. These qualities, indeed, were not unknown to English prose before the restoration. They are to be found in private letters, not meant for the public eye. Abore all, they are to be found in the writings of the veteran Hobbes, who, like Bacon and Ben Jonson, with both of whom he had literary relations, disdained all superfluity of ornament, and was content to make his prose a term and pregnant expression of a clear and rigorous intellect. But even Hobbes is by no means a court any reported attraction and even account as my no means free from the beauting sins of the older prose—careless construc-

The new proce was the work of a multiplicity of causes, all more or less reflecting the temper of the ago. One of these was the growing interest in acience, and the instatence of the new Royal Society on the need of a clear and plain style for accentifi exposition.

There is one thing more about which the Society has been most solicitons: Amer is one tonic sucre some, many two covery man sees many securiors, and that is the minuse of their Declarate, which, taken they had been only sext case as one sentence of tener conservers; where, unless easy not men only watchful to keep in day (supper the whole spirit and vigour of their Pengs Friends to step in the image, our visces specia can righter or tome consults and base accordance out by the image and redundance of special And, in had been soon earn our or the inner san recommence or specim.

for word, I day say that of all the Stadles of men, nothing may be some for some a time may that or an the binance or man, soming may to some obtains then this refere abundance of Phress, this trick of Managher, this Obtains there can recommend assumed at Arren, the treat of acceptant and the Brote. It will be the Brote in the Brote in the Arren and Arren and Arren and Arren and Arren are Arren and Arren and Arren and Arren and Arren are Arren are <math>Arren and Arren are Arren and Arren are Arren are Arren and Arren are Arren and Arren are Arren and Arren are Arren and Arren are Arren are Arren are Arren and Arren are Arren are Arren are Arren are Arren and Arren are Arrtendently or Aceyon, which seems so gives a mone in the 17 ores. It was

Demand for Simplicity and Clearness 369

Society towards the sorreeting of successes in Astrond Philosophy to which it is at all ethers, a most profest ensury. They have therefore been most increase in partiage in execution the only Remedy that can be found for the intervangence, and that has been a constant Resolution to reject all amplification, digressions, and everlings of styles; to return back to the primitive partial and shortness, when men delivered so many france almost in an equal number of covely. They have enseted from all their members a close maked, amounter of covely. They have enseted from all their members a close maked, such any of speaking positive expressions, clear somes, a native earboard beinging all things as near the Mathematical plainness as they can, and preferring the language of Arthraus, Countrymen, and Herchants before that of With one Scholars.

So writes Sprat, the first historian of the Royal Society Almost at the same time, in December 1864, his colleagues gave effect to their views by appointing a committee for the improvement of the English language, which included, besides himself, Waller Dryden and Evelyn Doubtiess, it was out of this committee that the idea arose of founding an English assdemy for the improvement of speaking and writing on the model of the French one. This idea was discussed at three or four meetings held at Gray s inn, where, in addition to the above, Cowley and the duke of Bockingham, also members of the Royal Society were present. But, in consequence of the plague and 'other circumstances intervening, the relan' came to methics?

The same need for greater plainness and simplicity of language was felt in pulpit oratory so far back as 10-16, when Wilkins, after wards bishop of Chester one of the founders of the Royal Society and its first secretary had recommended, in his popular Ecclesiates or the Clift of Preaching that the typle of preaching should be plain and without rheorical flourishes. After the restoration, those views found an adequate exponent in his friend John Tilloton, whose ermons at Lincoln a imm and St Lawrence Jewry attracted large congregations. His St Paul's sermon, preached before the lord mayor in March 1664, and printed by request made the title The Wisdom of being religious is, in its perfect plainness and absence of rhetoric, an instructive contrast to the brillianity imaginative discourses which Versuny Taylor heirvered, only eight months earlier at the funeral of architahop Branhall. But the reformation of pulpit cretory was not the work of one

¹ Everya ambodied his views in a latter to the chairman, Ear Poter Wynde, which is printed in J. E. Spinsparch Critical Energy of the Revententh Occurry vol. 11, pp. 410 ff.
² Evelyn to Pryps (ep. cit. vol. 11, pp. 237 ff.) As to the origin of the Royal Society see, alve, exite, chap. xv § CL, as in the change in the style of pulpit oratory exite, chap. xxx.

See ante, fle.

sermon or one man. Both Stillingfleet, render at the Temple, who was eren more popular than Tillotson, and South, public orator at Oxford, who was made a probeodary of Westminster in 1633, belonged to the modern school. In a sermon presched on Ascension day 1607 the latter divine commended spostolic preaching for its plainness and simplified.

nothing here of the finger of the Morth-star mothing of the door of angul's wings or the beautiful looks of sherokines; so starched similiardes, introduced with a thus have I seen a cloud rolling in its airy massion, and the like.

This ungenerous hit at Jeremy Taylor who was lately dead, well marks the antithesis between the new age and the old, between wit and poster, between reason and imagination.

Dryden's statement that 'if he had any talent for English proce it was owing to his having often read the writings of the great archibishop Hilotono must be regarded as a piece of generous exaggeration. At the most, he can only have learnt from him the virtnes of clear and logical statement, and of short, well coordinated sentences. In the optsile dedicatory of The Read-Lades (1904), and in the earlier part of the Essay of Drussatics Poess written in the summer of 1906, his management of the clause is still somewhat uncertain. It is not till Neunder who represents Dryden, John in the discussion that we recognise our first master of modern proces.

In the Reserv of Dramatick Poesis, the conversational character of Dryden's style is, also, strendy apparent. This, of course, is due, in part, to the dialogue form, but we may also trace in it the influence of Will's coffee house, where, though he was not very conversible, he was intened to as an oracle. The statement sug rests a man who talked with unsaval deliberation and precision, and with a nice choice of words, and whose written style was thus a more exact copy of his talk than is ordinarily the case. Moreover that style is always refined and well brod, reflecting in this, the tone of the court and particularly that of the king. The desire, save Dryden in his Defence of the Epilogue (1672), of imitating so great a rattern loosened the English from their stiff forms of conversation, and made them easy and pliant to each other in discourse. And, of Charles II, Hallfax says that his wit consisted chiefly in the outckness of his apprehension. It was a truit which he inherited-with others-from his grandfather Henri IV, and he gave expression to it with a refinement of language and a

¹ Page on Speece, sec. 122, p. 361 (Enger's ed.).

Early French Influence Heroic Romances 371 conversational case natural to one who had spent five years in

The influx of French fashions at the restoration has become a commonplace with historians but, so far as regards literature, it commanyance with materians out, so far as regards incremen, it had begin at least as early as the reign of Elirabeth. The marriage Park society of Charles I with Heurietta Maria (1926) gave a fresh impulse to the morement, and it was under the queen's anspices, if not by her actual command, that an English version of Cornellies Old was put on the stage in 1688, little more than a year after its publication in French. In the same year, three volumes of Balrace Letters appeared in an English translation, one of them in a second edition. The required in an English Granasseuri, one or mind in a second cultion. The required a rhetorician like Balanc, whose style is more important. than his thought, is a striking testimony to the high estimation in which the language and literature of France were then held. It much the language and merchure or remove were much being the minut be remembered that Richellen a great design of making France must be remembered unst successful a great design of making rance the first power in Europe was just beginning to be successful, and me nices power in Larupo was just reguining to no successin, and that it was parily in furtherance of this that, in 1634, he had that it was partly in furtherance or time times in 1003, no men founded the Académie frasquise. Though the civil war (1642-8) annual was accurance, magazine among uses carri war (1952-b) the checked, for a time, the French studies of Englishmen, it ultimately concrete, for a mine, the Element annues of any named, is unumately contributed to their diffusion. For it sent most leading Eoglish men contributes to Paris. In 1646, Hobbes, the first of all that fied, Waller, D Avenant, Denham, Cowley and Evelyn were all gathered together in the French capital. Cowley remained there till 1656, organics in the recent organics. Owners the collect in 1859. In 1651, D'Aversan' published his unfinished heroic poem on July 1 A remain Municipal and uniform poom Goodibert, which he had written at Paris, and which, in general conception and tone, shows the influence of the berole remances! Controlling and these, places are immerced on the period romances. their payments in regulate to went assowing connecting a rough gadra appeared in an English dress in 1647 but 'so disguised that Dorothy Osborne, that ardent reader of romances, hardly knew it. A translation of La Calprende's Cleopetre, and two translations of his Gusandre, began to appear in 1853 (Sir Charles Courell's translation of the former was published in 1676). English resions of Madeleine de Sonddry's Ibrahim, Le Grand Cyrus and Cld's followed in 1853, 1853—5 and 1859—61. There was a subsequent version of the last named in 1078, and translations by sequent version or the last minest in 1976, and cramminous by John Phillips of La Calprenede's Pharmsond and of Madeleine John Finnips of La Jaiprendus S. Franciscone and Of Mateletins de Brudery's Almahids in the provious year English imitations also Superred, such as lord Broghill (Orrery's Parthenissa (first also appeared, such as lord Broghill (Orrery's Parthenissa (first also appeared, such as lord Broghill (Orrery's Parthenissa (first also appeared, such as lord Broghill (Orrery's Parthenissa (first also appeared, such as lord Broghill (Orrery's Parthenissa (first also appeared, such as lord Broghill (Orrery's Parthenismo (first also appeared, such as lord Broghill (Orrery's Parthenismo (first also appeared, such as lord Broghill (Orrery's Parthenismo (first also appeared, such as lord Broghill (Orrery's Parthenismo (first also appeared, such as lord Broghill (Orrery's Parthenismo (first also appeared, such as lord Broghill (Orrery's Parthenismo (first also appeared, such as lord Broghill (Orrery's Parthenismo (first also appeared, such as lord Broghill (Orrery's Parthenismo (first also appeared, such as lord Broghill (Orrery's Parthenismo (first also appeared, such as lord Broghill (Orrery's Parthenismo (first also appeared, such as lord Broghill (Orrery's Parthenismo (first also appeared)).

¹ See, so to Genediters, and evol. vii. when its, and ef. p. 8 of the present volume. Cf. enter shap, is as to their inflaments upon the English Street, and upon herole or in continuous. plays in partienlar

part) in 1654 with which, in splic of its handsome language Dorothy Osborne was not very much taken, and Sir George Mac kensies Arcting or the berious Romance in 1661 A complete edition of Parthenissa in three rolumes was published in 1605 and 1667 The most active translator at this time was John Davice of Kidwelly Bosides Class (1852) and the last four parts of Okopdire (1638-60), he translated norels by Scarron (1637-67) Volturo a Letters (1837), which soon eclipsed Ralmo s in favour Yournes Letters (1907), which wou earliest parties in terous and are recommended by Locke as a pattern for letters of compliment, mirth, railery or conversation Sorels Le Berger catronogoni (1653) and Scarron's hourales tragi-comignes (1657-63). The same anthor's Don Japhet a Armenie and Let trous Dorothees were translated in 1857 and his Roman comique in 1876. But it was his buricaques which had the greatest reque in this country and produced numerous imitators. Charles Conton led the way with his Scarronides, a burlesque of the first book of Yergil, in 1664, and followed it up with the fourth book in 1665. Other writers burleaqued Homer and Ovid, all outdoing Scarron in Other writers pursuanted at the state of the state of Dryden, Parmanus spoke the cent of Billingspate.

But, to return to the days of the commonwealth, there appeared, in 1653, the translation of a more famous work, which, in one sense, was a buricaque. This was Sir Thomas Urquiarts remarkable version of the first two books of Rabelais a great romance. It apparently fell flat, for the third book was not published till forty specious for many or many or many or many process artended the translation of another Jears access of the protection and the second of the protection of under the title The Mysterse of Jenniline, discovered in certain felters, was published in 1657 the year in which Pascal wrote the last of the letters, a new edition being called for in the following year And a translation of Descartes a Treate des passens de fame (1650) testifies to an interest in that psychological analysis which was to be a brilliant feature of the new school of French

At the restoration, there was a decided falling off in this work of translation. In fact, all the translations from the French proor transaction. In tact, an are transactions from the French pro-duced during the twenty five years of Charles II's reign hardly surpass in number those which appeared during the last eight rears of the commonwealth. The first decade after the restoration Fas marked chiefly by a fairly successful attempt to acclimatise and Rabelele, see once, thep. tt.

Comelle, the details of which have been given in a previous chapter. The psychological tragedles of Racine were less to the tatte of English audiences, and it was not till nearly the close of queen Annes reign that they secured a footing on the English anno a reign that may secured a round on the engine The mparalleled debt to Mollère has been pointed out in an and apparameted deer to anoners may over pointed out in an earlier chapter. It need only be said here that, of all his thirty one plays, only about half-a-dozen escaped the general pillages plays, only about half-a-dozen escaped the general pillages. Le Fontaine was not translated into English till the next century but he was not cramsisted into ranginal an ano near contains but he was road and admired by the English wits, and it was only his growing infirmities which, towards the end of his life, perented him from sceepting an invitation sent by some of his English admirers, who engaged to find him an honoumble sub-

To Boilean, the remaining member of this Illustrious group of to comes, the reasoning memory of the management friends, Dryden refers in 1677 three years after the publication imenus, tryuen reiors in 10/1 inreo years after the production of LArt Poetques, as one of the chief critics of his ago while, in statence in London. the Discourse concerning the Original and Progress of Satire the Discourse Concerning the Original and Progress of Satire (1903), he pays a splendid tribute to him, as the admirable Mose, abose numbers are excellent, whose expressions are noble, whose thoughts are just, whose language is pure, whose nones, whose mongrus are just, whose same is close. His Letrius appeared satire is pointed and whose sense is close. His Letrius appeared in English in 1683 his Art Pochique, translated by Sir William in ranguan in 1002 his art Fuenque, transactor of the rame Soames and revised by Dryden in 1683 and, about the same Soemes and revised by Drytten, in 1983 and about the same time, Oldham imitated two of his matters, the fifth and the tume, outman innusiest two or as seatures, the mun and the eighth. The second had been already translated by Butler and eignin. The section issu occur attempt of animal by Dutor and the third by Buckingham and Rochester Bosmet is represented the unru by Ducatingham and Muchonsia. ny some or un controversial vitaines, such in un disposition as it Doctrins de l'Eplis Catholique and Conference avec M Claude, DOORTHS OR . LIGHES CHANGE SET ! Histoire Universelle, which was and by his great Discours set ! Histoire Universelle, which was translated in 1688. Malebranche's Recherche de la Vérité and La Rocheroramid's Marines both appeared in English in 1694, and, of the latter there had been an earlier translation by Mrs Aphra or the latter there mu been an earlier examination by arts appra-Bohn. Pascal's Pessees and La Bruybre's Carnethres, which Dryden couples together as 'two of the most entertaining books that modern French can boast of, were translated in 1633 and 1690 respectively erencu can near or, were transmiss in 1000 and towe respectively in 1658, too, appeared an English version of Mine de la Fayette s m and, my epponent an engine reason or must be expected at Princesse de Chece. But a mere record of translations from a 1 See with the Tribert was send and retired in Looking maker the title to the terminal of the title to the terminal of the ter part) in 1034, with which in spite of its handsome language Dorothy Osborne was not very much taken, and Sir George Mac kenules Arraina or the Serious Romance in 1601 A complete edition of Parthenism in three rolumes was published in 1005 and The most active translator at this time was John Davice of Kidwelly Bouldes Clidia (1052) and the last four parts of Okopdre (1658-60), he translated novels by Scarron (1057-67) Volumes Letters (1837), which soon eclipsed Belmos in favour and are recommended by Locke as a pattern for letters of compliment, mirth, reillery or conversation Sorel's Le Berger companions, mirror, remary or companion of the service carries and Scarron & America trage-companion carrangems (1003) and ocarron a numerous irregreeous and (1667-63). The same author's Don Japhet d'Arménie and Les from Dorothics were translated in 1657 and his Roman configue in 1676. But it was his burlesques which had the greatest regree in this country and produced numerous imitators. Charles Cotton led the way with his Scarrowides, a burlesque of the first book of Vergil, in 1664, and followed is up with the fourth book in 1665. Other writers burlesqued Homer and Ovid, all outdoing Scurron In coarsences and rulgarity In the words of Dryden, Parmanus spoke the cant of Billingagate.

[,] non cats, shep, vit. Lo Mesterr was asked and primed in London under the The Jerical in 1811. It was spid with the first title The Militaken Beertly in 1836. Non easts about Y Factioni Register vol. 5, P. 2021 Ward, & W Hissory of Res 2000, Olles, Particol Register vol. 5, P. 2021 non accord, Gime, Portioni Aspente vol. 111, p. 816 m.

But, to return to the days of the commonwealth, there appeared, in 1653, the translation of a more famous work, which, in one sense, was a burlesqua. This was Sir Thomas Urquharts remarkable reasion of the first two books of Rabelets great romance. It apparently fell flat, for the third book was not published till forty years later! Greater success attended the translation of another monument of French prose, Parca's Lettres Provincales, which, under the title The Mysteric of Jerusiane, discovered in certain letters, was published in 16.7 the year in which Pascal wrote the last of the letters, a new edition being called for in the following year And a translation of Descartes a Traits des passons de fame (1600) testifice to an interest in that psychological analysis which was to be a brilliant feature of the new school of French Writera

As the restoration there was a decided falling off in this work of translation. In fact, all the translations from the French pro duced during the twenty five years of Charles II's reign hardly surpose in number those which appeared during the last eight years of the commonwealth. The first decade after the restoration was marked chiefy by a fairly successful attempt to acclimatise and Babalaia, see ente chep. tt.

Later French Influence Bosleau

Comeile, the details of which have been given in a previous consecute the cream of said travelles of Rache were less to the uniques and prices are send it was not till nearly the close of larte of Empley and sendence, and it was not till nearly the close of one or recipi that ther secured a footing on the English queen anne s retien that the recursi a touries on the engine stage with Ambrose Philips : Dutrest Mother (Andromaque) The unparalleled deby to Mollère has been pointed out in an curper chapter. It need only be said here that, of all his thirty one part, cult about half-a-dozen escaped the general pillages Le Penine was not translated into English till the next century but he was read and admired by the English with and it was only his growing infirmities which, towards the end of his life perential him from accepting an invitation sent by some of his Merchion mm from accepting an invitation sent or some or ma-English admirers, who engaged to find him an honourable sub-

To Boilean, the remaining member of this illustrious group of freeds, Urrden refers in 1677 three years after the publication of L'Art Pochque, as one of the chief critics of his age while in nistence in London. the Discourse concerning the Original and Progress of Saire (1623), be pays a splendid tribute to him, as the admirable Bollean, whose numbers are excellent, whose expressions are notice, whose numbers are excellent, whose language is pure, whose houghts are just, whose language is pure, whose mitte is pointed and whose sense is close. His Letter appeared in English in 1682 his Art Poctore, translated by Sir William Segment in 1652 ms are rougher, transaction of the same time, Oldram imitated two of his saures, the fifth and the which the second had been already translated by Butler and the third by Buckingham and Rochester Bossnet is represented by some of his controversial writings, such as his Exposition de la of mano of the controverness writings, and as an anapolition at a Bortries de l'Égliss Cathologies and Conference area if Carade. and by his great Discours ser l'Histoire Universille which was trunkied in 1688. Malebranches Recherchs de la Verif and La Rocheforenida Marines both appeared in English in 1694, and of the latter there had been an earlier translation by Mrs Aphra Behn, Pascal's Penson and La Bruyère & Carneters, which Dryden couple together as two of the most entertaining books that modern French can boast of, were tramlated in 1688 and 1699 respectively in 1633, too, appeared an English version of Mine de la Favettes Prisone de Chres. But a mere record of translations from a See once, they, viii. Le Mesters was acted and Fermed in Lendon Eacher the title.

Bee once, they, viii. Le Mesters was acted and Fermed in Lendon Eacher the title. The Kitalite Recent in 1688.

Bee each above.

per manufacture of the period Register vol. 1, 2 272; Ward, L. W., History of the same, then ore auton, U.S. Portland resputer vol. 11, p. 215 s.

I fluid Dramatic Literature vol. 11, p. 215 s.

foreign literature is far from constituting a measure of its influence. The real influence which French literature exercised upon our own between the restoration and the close of the seventeenth century may be classified under four heads that of Corneille and the horder remances upon tragedy, that of Mollère upon consedy that of Montaigue upon the easy and that of French criticism upon English criticism. Neither the first nor the second of these influences is really important for the fashion of the riming heroic play soon passed away, and, though our comedy horrowed its materials from Molière, is took over little of his form, and nothing of his spirit. The influence of Montaigne upon the casay will be discussed later. But it may be well, in the first innance, to consider the influence which is the most important of all, because it affected our whole literature and not merely some special department of it.

The debt of English literature to French criticism begins with D'Avenant a laboured and longwinded preface to Gondibert written in Paris and there published, with an answer by Hobbes, in 1650. It was, no doubt, suggested by Chapelain's turgid and obscure preface to Marino's Adone (1823). In 1650, Chapelein was at the height of his authority as a critic, and the whole tone of this piece of writing, with the talk about nature and the insistence on the need of criticism as well as impiration in poetry, is thoroughly French. Dryden, in his Essay of Dramatick Poesia is perfectly independent in his views but he must have written it with a copy of the 1650 edition of Cornellie a plays, which contain his Engueers and Discours, by his ride. Among the French critics of the next generation. Boileau stands out prominent, but his anthority in England during the last quarter of the seventeenth century was inhanced by that of Ranin, whose Rollexious sur la poctione d'Arretote was translated by Rymer in the same year in which it appeared in French (1674), and of whom Dryden save that he 'la alone sufficient, were all other critics lost, to teach anew the rules of writing! Le Bossu and Dacler were also highly esteemed. Dryden speaks of Le Bossu as the best of modern critica, and the greater part of his Discourse concerning the Original and Progress of Sature (1695) is little more than an adaptation of Darler's Essai sur la Satire. A translation of this treatise, which consists of only a few pages, was printed in an appendix to one of Le Bossus, Du poime coque, in 1695. 'I prosume your Ladrahip has read

Ot. seat, p. 32.

* Apology for Heroich Pootry (1877) (Energy of Ext W P vol. v, p. 181).

Bosen, anys Brisk to lady Froth, in Congreres Double-Dealer 10 Yes, and Rapin and Docter upon Aristotle and and in Donnia a The Impartial Crutic, produced in the mme year as Congreres play frequent appeals are made to Dader's translation of Aristotie's Poetics, which he had published,

Of these three Frenchmen, all of whom have now passed into aree des Remarques, in the provious year oblition, it may be said that, like Bolleau, they express in their literary criticism the absolutist ideas of their age. But their ordiook is narrower, and their stillude towards the succents less independent, than Bolleau a. Conform to the Precepts of Aristotle and Horaco and to the Practice of Honer and Virgil, is the summary of Le Bossus longwinded treatise. Rapin says that to please against the rules is a bad principle, and he defines art as good sense reduced to method. In Thomas Rymer, who prefixed some senses removed to memore in an anomal asymmetry to his translation a characteristic preface, he found an interpreter who with equal respect for Aristotle, laid even Scotter emplants when outsi respect for Armonic, said over 8 commonwease. He aspired to be the Plain Dealer of criticism, and having examined modern epic poems in the preface to Rapin, proceeded, four years later (1076), to 'handle The Tragedies of the Last Age with the same liberty He was answered in verse by the Last Age with the same liberty The was answered in verse by the Cupon Oritics who judge of modern plays by the rules of the Ancients), and in prose by Dryden, who, in his precious to All for Lore, the play in which he renounced rime, rebels against the not serve, use peay in which are remainded rune, teners equals the anthority of 'our Chedreux critics, and, while he admits that the Andenia as Mr Rymer has judicionaly observed, are and ought to be our masters, qualifies his admission with the remark that, though their models are regular they are too little for English traged. The earl of Mulgrave (afterwards marquis of Normanby and duke of Buckinghamahire), in his much admired Hasay upon Poetry (1669), drew largely from Bollean's Art Poetique and, in Poerry (1988) urew largely from Bonisan's Art Fostiges 8181, in 1684, the sutherity of the rules was reinforced by a translation of the abbe d'Aubignac & Pratique du theatre

Then, the mode of France; without whose rules None much presume to set up here as fools?

Rymer a Short view of Tragedy (1693), with its famous criticism of itymer a course even by arrayedy (1986), what his minous carticum of Othello, roused Dryden to another spirited defence of English Others, roused Dryuen w annual spirited describe of Laguish tragedy. But the authority of Rymer continued to stand high, Dryons, Prologue to Aisten can Assertes (1994).

1 Deficiency Percent Percent (rol. rn of Micollary Percent) (1993). As to

Rymer of sett, chaps, vs and via even with Dryden. It was well, therefore, for English literature that there were critics in France who paid little or no respect to that there were critics in grance who pend inthe or no cospection the rules, and who believed that individual taste was a better control than Rymer's common-sense of all ages. Such were the criterion una stymer a communatura ou au agrae. Outes acto uno cheraller (afterwards marquis) de Méré, whose letters, containing econsuler (settermanus mariques) up mirro, manero societa communios. R good deal of acattered criticism, were published in 1687 tho père a gova ucas oi massereu enticatus nere protestreu in avos, uto prie Bonhoura, nhomo Manière de penser sur les outrages de l'espril appeared in the same year and La Bruyère, whose Caracters, appeared in the same year and has truyere, whose currenters, with the admirable opening chapter Des Outrages de l'esprit, followed at the beginning of the next. All these three writers, tonower at the beginning of the best. All these three writers, of whom the second and third were known in England before the or muon who secured and that were above in adjustic belong to the school of taste, come or the century may be said to belong to the school or teach, when taxio was still a matter of individual judgment, and had not yet stiffened into the narrow code of an alignrehy

But there was another critic of the same achool who exercised a far greater influence on writers, for he was living in our midst. a lar greater minutings on strices, for no sas aring on our minutes was Saint-Erremond, who, exiled from his own country made ann was count-devictioned, who, extrem from his own country manner. England his home from 1662 to 1665 and, again, from 1670 to his Logung ms nome from 1000 to 1000 and again, from 1010 to ma death in 1703. He was on intimate terms with the English wits and courilers, with Hobbes, Waller and Cowley with Bockingtam, and courtiers, with montes, watter and coving with percangular, Arlington and St Albana, and his conversational powers were highly appreciated at Will's and other places of resort. His occasional writings were translated from time to time into English, occasiones withinks were transacted from one to time into Engine, the first to appear being a small volume of cosays on the drama, too may to appear using a small volume or uselys on too mains, including one on English comedy (1693). Regarded as an oracle on both sides of the Channel, he had a marked influence on English literary criticism. But, though he had a real critical gift, the was neither catholic nor profound. He clarg to the favorities of his youth, to Montaigne, Mallerbe, Cornellie, Volture, and having been exiled from France at the close of In boars Rigence. he had little sympathy for the age of Louis XIV Molitre and La Pontaine barely found favour in his eyes he was unjust to Racine, and he detected Bollean. Yet much should be pardoned in a man who rectared to my in the year 1072, that there is nothing so perfect in the Poetics of Aristotle that it abould be a rule to all nations and all ages.

It was possibly owing to Saint-Erremond that Montaignes popularity in this country which had lain dormant for a season, popularity in this country which that the new terms of a reason, blossomed afresh after the restoration, and gave a new stimulus to ourseased an earl according to according to the literary cases which owed to him its name and original in spiration. For after 1625 the year in which Paccos Escape received their final form, the easily began to lose its popularity

Then, at the beginning of the commonwealth, a versatile writer named Thomas Forde, produced a volume of comps. Leans For named 1 norms rorue, produced a volume or essays, Letens for tends (1649), the common topic of which, the mutability of man and human affilirs, strongly suggests Montalgue and, on the ere and numan amars, arrongly suggested anonuages and, on two ore of the restoration, Francis Oaborne published A Muscellary of Sandry Essayes Paradoxes and Problematical Discourses Letters and Characters (1659), of which the style has all the faults, and none of the virtues, of the older proses. The author, who was master of the horse to Shakespeares patron William Herbert, earl of Pembroke, is best known for his Advice to a Son nicioci, can di remunac, is desi shown for als Adecte to done which first published in 1658, went through numerous editions. It is a strange admixture of platitude and paradox, much of which night have come straight from the lips of Polonius. The style, when it is not terse and apophthegmatic, as of one trying to lmittle Bacon, is stiff with conceits and longwinded sentences. It was Abraham Cowley a friend of Saint Erremend, who gare a new turn to the essay Cowley has often been called a transitional writer but he is one in the sense, not that he dailied in a halfway bornes, but that, both in proce and verse, he made a complete trainit from the old school to the new It is particularly compacts trained from one our school to the new writings. In the interesting to trace this progress in his prose writings. In the nucreating to trace this progress in his process withings. In the earliest of these, the preface to the 1656 edition of his poems, his sentences are at first cumbrous and involved, and though, when he scurcesces are at area cumurous and inforced, and unuight, which has work they become shorter and better balanced, there warms to his work, they become shorter and beaut tenanced once remains a certain stiffness in the style quite unlike the con commission of the later cases. It is nowere to Jeremy Taylor versions again. versational case of ma later casals. It is nearer to sereiny laylor (who was only five years Cowley's senior and who died in the (who was only nive years cowing a senior and with the mean me the same year) than to Dryden. To the older school also belongs the Discourse by early of Vision concerning the Government of Oliver DIRECTORS OF SCHIP OF VISION CONCERNING HAS DOCUMENTED OF OTHER OF Which the latter part is a fine example of Crossicos (1001), or wincii une inter pare is a line example of rhetorical prose. Even in the preface to Outler of Colemanmeterical prime. Liven in the pressor to Course of Cotenan-Street (1668), though the sentences, as a rule, are short and Street. (1953), though the semences, as a rule, are short and well coordinated, Cowley has by no means shaken himself free well coordinated, Cowley has by no means shaken himself free well coordinated, The cessys proper eleven in number from the old mannersm. from the old mannership. The case's proper eleven in number were all written during the last four or five years of his life, and, were all written curing the more lour or nre years of his life, and, to most of them, a more approximate date can be assigned. to most or ment, a more approximate onto can be assigned. In 1663, having been disappointed of the masterablp of the Savoy in 1003, naving oven complished his design of withdrawing himself from nospital, no accompnished his design of within aving minish from all tumnits and business of the world, by retiring to Barn Elms an common and comments of the average of Londoners. Before this, on the Thames, then a farourite resort of Londoners.

Ci. cast, va. vii, emap. viii.
1 As to Oowley's postry see extr val. vii, chap. iii, pp. 61 ff.

he must have written the easy entitled The danger of Procrastno must care assured the cases contained and contained as control of contemplation. if is not without charm, but long sentences at III occur Transitional in atyle, also, is the easily Of Agriculture in which he proposes that one college in each finitionally spould be exected and shinouan one conego in each university amount of crecion and appropriated to this Study and the short carry entitled The Garden, praired to this citing and the short cases entitied as outlier, deficated to his friend Erelyn, which was written in 1604, between continued to me ment interprise which was written in 1994, occasion the publication of Evelyn a Kalendarram Hortense and that of his Gardening. Cowley speaks of himself as atteching still in the im of a hired house and a garden. In April 1863 he moved to the on a nico nonse ann a garnen. In april 1000 ne moreu io im Porch House, Chertsey and there he died two years later To these last two years of his life belong the carrys of Obscarry, Of My Sof and that entitled The dangers of an Honors man in such Combons, and to the same besied as man site all bacoppilits. same company and so the same period we may with an promoting of Schilde, Of Greatness and The Shortness of Life and sasangu ty contract, the three six comps, Cowley has found his style and his method. The influence of Montalgne is unmistakable. In the two cases in which he is mentioned by name, Q' Soluteds and Q'two comps in which no is mentioned by name, by continue and by Greathess, not only the titles, but some of the contents, are borrowed from him. Of those chief characteristics which mark the cases of Montaigne in its final phase of development—the examples from names good in the ment peace or the recordance who examples around classical and other authors, the personal element and the artistic cassical and other authors, one personal element and the armine workmanhip—none is wanting in Cowley. Yet he is no mere worstmanusp-none is manually in country. Let me is no more stabilite of Montaigne. He is saved from this by the personal estimite or montaigned for a solver man than the because of the biographer his compa eaments in the winings. In the warms of the congression was competed as a real chronicler of his own thoughts upon the point of his are a real caronicer of un own moughts upon the point of ma rethrement. In spite of The Speciator's appear that he praised recurrence. In space of the operator's succer that he praised solitude when he despaired of shinking in a court, there is no reason annuaue when he despands or summing in a court, single a no reason to doubt his carnest affection for obscurity and retirement. We to use an earness ancestes are observed and restrement. We can see, too, in his casays, the other qualities ascribed to him by Sprat.—his lack of affectation, his modesty and humility and above open—ms mea or successivity and mountary and manners, and nounter and all, the pleasant gravity of his speech. The comp of Greatness may any non-presents gravity or management the country by orrestness may be taken as an example of his method. Here we find, not the be taken as an example of all message. Here we mad, not too solitary self-communing of a Burron or a Browne, but a friendly somary sent-communing or a nonzero are a necessary sent-communing or a nonzero and reader—an anocdote mercurality of commons of the color sensor and the color sensor as few examples from steer transaction and the color concess, a low crampos much sectorize of the folbles of the Roman emperors a pointed nucconics of the late giant of our nation a quotation or two from the Latin poets and a few lines of the anthon's own. There from the ratio proces and a row times or the sample a value ration in no disclaim of commonplaces, but they are dressed up as no custom or commonwages out they are creased up as ridiculous paradoxes, before being stripped and presented to the reader as brand-new truths. As for the style, it is nother stiff

Gowley Sprat Sir William Temple 379 nor slorenly, neither a court suit, nor a dressing gown and allphore. our surroup, menuer a cours sun, nor a messing grown and ampers.
The choice of words is fastidious, without being affected the use of metaphor is restrained sentences are well turned, but not all on the same pattern. The artist, in short, has concented his art Covery we are told, intended to publish a discourse upon style. It would have been agreeable reading but it would doubtless have revealed as little of his secret as have similar treatises by Cowley a cross were first printed, under the title Second Discourses, by very of Essays, in Verse and Prose, in 1003, the year later masters of the art of prose. after his death. In the same year his friend Thomas Sprat (after wards bishop of Rochester) wrote an elegant account of his life and writings, which, unfortunately is as sparing of facts as the same will writings, which, unfortunitely is as sparing of iscus an use suite a History of the Royal Society Worse than this, having yield as the County of the Royal Society. told us that Cowley excelled in his letters to his private friends as we can well believe from the one letter of this sort which has escaped destruction, ... Sprat declines to publish them on the ground that 'in such letters the souls of men should appear undressed and in that negligent halit, they may be fit to be seen by one or two in a chamber but not to go abroad into the street.

, as a common out the way across more than period has Happily, one collection of private letters of this period has been preserved, which reveals a native tendernoss and imacent seem preserved, which reveals a marrie tenderness and innocent galety of mind equal to Cowley's. These are the letters of guery or miner equal to Cowley a 10,000 are use senters of Derothy Osborne, nices of Francis Osborne, written to her future hinband, Bir William Temple, between the antium of 1862 and numeron, our rimmon rempire, nervoca use summin an rouse sum that of 1054. She not only writes delightful letters, full of good tone or 100% one now only writes using num series, in or good series, peoperation and humour but she has views of her own some, persourance and manour out and may now or nex own about the epistolary style. 'All letters, methinks, should be free and easy as one s discourse not studied as an oretion, not made up of hard words like a charm. This criticism she does not consider applicable to the letters of her lover

Nothing is more pleasant than to trace through the records of Tokung is more present usin to true strongs the records of Temple's political life the services rendered to him, and, through Temple's pouncal me me services rendered to mm, and, through him, to the public interest, by this most devoted of vomen, though nm, to the pulme micross, by this most deroused in women, though the title has been held to be disputable on behalf of Temple's the true may occur ment to be commemorated with his wife and himself on his tombatone. Lady Giffard gave up the whole of nument on ms tonustone. Lawy united gave up the whole of her long widowhood to the companionship and service of her per long while which while the price L(f) and beloved brother, and wrote anonymously the brief L(f) and admirable character of him, afterwards prefixed to the folio edition of his works (1750). But, although, at times, it was more convenient for lady Giffard to be the companion of her brothers Journeys than it was for his wife, the latter was by no means, as has been anggosted, thrown into the shade by her and a complete harmony of purpose and feeling seems to have existed among the tria Lady Temple was taken into her husband a confidence as conpletely in his public, as in his private, business, except when he was under obligations of absolute secrety when left behind at the Hague, she was able to give him trustworthy information as to Buckingham a negotiations with France and also had the principal stare in the confidential enquiries as to what concernd the Person, Humour and Dispositions of the young princess Mary of York whose hand William of Orange thereupon made up his mind to ask in marriage? Lady Giffard's own letters, which have been recently published a tack the rare charm which attaches to those of her sister-in-law after as well as before, marriage, even at seasons when, according to lady Temple s own description, she felt 'as weary as a dog without his Master The greatest tragedy of her life, the death by his own hand of the son of whom, in his babyhood, she had written as the quietest best little boy that ever was borne, seems to school her into a calm solemnity of expression which has a pathos of its own, unlike that which mingies with the humour of her earlier writing.

^{1 &}amp; letter to Syrik is printed in Johnson's Life of Cooley The letters writing to 1 & letter to Syrik is printed in Johnson's First, in 1640, which are printed Harry Persons theorem and Articles and Articles and Printed In Microfileses Assisted, excitation only public news.

Temples own letters not including those to Dorothy were published after his death by his quoudons secretary Swift (whose reverence for his patron certainly did not go deep), the first two rolimes appearing in 1700 and the third in 1703; This correspondence, which includes many letters from Arlington, lord keeper Bridgeman, and others (with Clifford, notwithstanding their connection through lady Temple, her husband was quite out of touch mete, pp. 129-180

⁵ See Temple's Manachy (ed. 1999), p. 186; and of the volume shad in the next

Pr Min Julia Longo (1911). The collection markets, besties a few britten from 2) Also stone accept (1912). An examinate demands section a see stone facty. Temple to her horizont, several lattice by lady (littled and her correspondents, any tampa to an enterous, errors moves by only traces are not recomposed attacking one the long partial of years from 100 to 1775. Among these correspondents ermoning free tim room person or pant times store in 112s. Among times accompanied with a six Mr. Extherine Philips (the Matchiese Orbida') in a rather imprivated below as an assume comps (see seasoness unous) in a raiser sengitions sense. See William Golschim (as admires of Sealarine), the read less Lincoln, lady Deblary on Human between the security of constants of the security of of Myls Thoughts) The length of Man across by this compromises Layers is of Table as districtivistic of my pertinate period; but the eclimites, as a whole, a tainteresting applement to the Durothy Column series.

The values of letter of 1668 and 1869 published in 1809 by Jones, D. was Examination in mome to store one every promotion in story by some, it, was Examinated by these is no reason by downing the exchanging of his content. See Courteray 7 p ... 146 of the W Dam Trophs, vol. E. p. 142.

from the first) falls to warrant the statement of its title-page, that it contains an account of the most Important Transactions that poss d in Christendom during the period which the earlier volumes cover (1665-73)) but it furnishes a lucid surrey of unusual interest. In his Letters, even more conspicuously than in his Memors, Temples style is wholly unaffected and unambitious, and the acupus a style is sucury unauceted and unaumanous, and the safe early letter to his father in Ireland, giving an account of his rist. only series to me same in Hennis, giving an account or me sure to the alippery bishop of Minster is an admirable specimen of lively narrative. It is worth noticing that not only Temple but most of the men of affairs who correspond with him write in the same straightforward and simple style—It was a period when much importance had begun to be attached in France to the clearnes and readableness of diplomatic despatches, and it was natural that the same labit should have become more common in English diplomatic correspondence. In 1668, Temple was, as he says, Young and Very New in Business but it was not long before he was engaged in the negotiations of which the result was a diplometic master. piece, the famous Triple Alliance of 1668, and in those which accompanied its brenk-up. A considerable number of Temples letters and other papers are in French, Latin or Spanish, in all of which tongoes he was a proficient but he naturally finds for opportunities for a display of literary taste as well as of linguistic opportunities for a display of interest described on the letters is, however, ability? The personal interest of some of his letters is, however, complete the not only his trust in his wife, but his modest and manfected estimate of the value of bis own public services, even ananecreu estimato in tim visito of this own public services, over in so exceptional an instance as the carrying through of the Triple m so exceptional all maintee as the carrying through of the Triple Alliance, and bringing. Things drawn out of their Center back Annual on the center again, cannot fall to engage the sympathy of the The distinctive qualities of Temple as a writer of clear and reader

AUD UNIUNCUITO QUANIUES UL LEUDES SE SE WILLET UL CLEAR RING. agreeous pulse are even more ununcure or magnetions, which are concerned with the later years of his career_from 1674 when the conclusion of peace with the Dutch and the general

¹ Britis makes a charitar extinions of the title originally gives to Temple's Mountry

See Section 10, 1970. when politheads a security extraction of the true originally given to respect when politheads without his extendity. PRINCIPLE STRONG ELS SELECTIVE SES PETUDES IN 1981 III (St. 1715)

La a letter dated August 1607 (vol. 1, p. 171). Turnyla experience a rich that Oracley

La a letter dated August 1607 (vol. 1, p. 171). Turnyla experience a rich than 100 cm. 1 Is a better dated dispert 1607 (rol. t. p. 117). Temple expenses a wish final Ownly would drift the berois death of coulded house in the berois death of coulded house in term the value of ways. world sing the berois death of captain Douglas to his borning ship at Chatham, and, in generally that remerching could be done to here the Yelv of Wils, and to raise up the Pattern of come (qualities, shows their real value, rather than large greey) lists. The Pattern of come (qualities, shows their real value), rather than king greey) lists. The pattern of come (qualities, shows the real value) and the pattern of the p through anaeometers contribution to the herois tendency in contemporary literature, we read the set Talaga work Indahna, nor relay Talaga work to Reading. It would not relay to the set of we hadder set Things worth Relating, nor relate Things worth he Reading. It would showed seems as if Temples advences from home had left him in Ignerators of the Apperrace, in this very year 1687 of Asset Mirekila.

During the same period of letture, he produced, in 1667 or 1668, During the same period of feature, no produced, in 1007 or 1008, An. Essay upon the present State and Settlement of Ireland on ossily spon in present outle and occurrence of transmit which though containing the process of the late settlement, advises warm mongh consuming me process of the servement author no remedy for existing results beyond that which had been no remeny for extratory remains beyond that which had been commended by Spenner In 1673, Temple published An Essay commended by openior in 10/3, compto promised An Dansy spon the Advancement of Trace in Iroland, which amorts the True and natural ground of Trade and Riches to be the Number of Poople in proportion to the Ground they inherit, but proposes or reorie in proportion to the export trade suggested to him by his own residence in Leinster own resumes on semmer Part I of the Miscellanea contains A Survey of the Consti rare 1 of the Attendance contains a correy of the Empire and other principal European countries, with their Relations to England in the Fear 1871 countries, were near neutrons to Engrava in the 1 cm 10/11 presented in that year to Arillageon a clear exposition of the presented in that your to Armston a crear capeanton of the reasons for and against England's pontion attention and of the forces for any against infigurate algorithm folding France against the Dutch, with a specially luminous account Journey reams science with Dutter, who a specially summon account of the general history of Spanish politics and of the rise of the or the general matery or opanism pointers and or the rise or the United Provinces to the rank of a firstrate power. It will be United Provinces to use rank of a matrice power, at will one that this diplomatic summary clear as it is, opens with noted that this dipionistic summary closer as it is, opens with sentences of almost Clarendonian length. To a latter period seems sources or aimore unaresponding length. 10 a nature person seems to belong An Introduction to the History of England (published to people an introduction to one literary of constants (published in 1695), which may possibly have been intended as an introin 1000), which may possibly majo been intersect as an intro-duction to Kennetts History the editors of which, however querion to Acadesta clissory toe custors of which however proposed to use Milton for the period before the Norman conquest. proposed to use authorizer use period contract use authorized confusion for mythology and treats Account of his subject very anidocarly till he comes to the reign no part or ma saugeer very annuaumant un ne comes to me reign of William the Conqueror whom he holds to have been unjustly or remain the confidence, which so where to have occur improved the confidence written. Idea all Temples writings, this canarica by constantion writers. Last an 1 couple 8 writings, this abridgment is very readable, though, unlike most of them, the work of a dilationic. Of much greater interest is his Essay spore the Original and Nature of Government (written about 1679), which Original and Nature of Contravances (written about 10/2), which is noticeable as arguing in direct contravention of the theory of a social contract claborated by Hobbes and Locke, that state a securi contract customeson by monores and mode, that make the material and patriardial authority It is not too much to say that, in this argument, authority it is not too much to say use, in this argument, Temple was before his times. Locke takes no notice of his Temple s casays, or as they were called, Miscellanea, appeared rempos casa)s, or as more were cause, sensentiated, appeared in three parts the first in 1580 the second in 1890 and the third, two years after the authors death, in 1701 The most widely read Gohas Hopkins University Deta, Baltomera, a.d.

See Hernett, F. I. Sie William Trapie on the Origin and Kniese of Constraints of these essays. Upon Ancient and Modern Learning (1690), was inspired by that quarrel between the ancients and the moderns which for more than two years, had divided the literary world of Paris and was in its turn, the origin of the celebrated controversy on the Letters of Phalarus between Bentley and Charles Boyle. But neither in this nor in the companion essay Upon Poetry does Temple show to much advantage. His knowledge is too superficial for his task. He has a bowing acquaintance with many anthora but he is not on intimate terms with any. He has sauntered through the outer courts of literature, but he has never penetrated to the manctuary. It is interesting, however to note his ordnions on French literature. In postry he only mentions two names, Bonsard for the past and Boilean for the present. For more he names Rabelais Montalone, and among the moderns. Volture, I.a. Rochefoncauld and Bumy Rabutin, whose Historie Amoureuse de Ganle (1665) had a succès de scandals in this country as well as in France' Of the French language, Temple justly observes that, as it has much more Finess and Smoothness at this time so I take it to have had much more Force, Spirit, and Compass in Montaignes Age , while, of Rabelsia he says that be 'seems to have been Father of the Ridicule, a man of uni versal learning as well as wit. Was it this praise which led to the publication, in the following year (1693), thirty three years after the author's death, of Sir Thomas Drophart's translation of the third book of Pantagruel' followed, in 1708, by that of the fourth and fifth books from the pen of Pierre Antonius Motteux. one of the 84,000 refugees whom the revocation of the ediet of Nantes sent to this country? The most agreeable of Temples essays are those Upon the Oure of the Gout (part 1), Upon the Gardens of Epigerus, or Of Gardening (part II) and Upon Health and Long Lafe (part III). The latter is especially interesting for the light that it throws upon the notions of the are as to health and longerity and the specifics in use for the cure of ordinary allments. Thus, we learn that alchoof or ground-by is most sovereign for the eyes and admirable in Frencies and that the constant use of alchoof ale is a specifick Remedy or Prevention of the Stone that the Spirit of Elder is sovereign in Cholicks. and the use of it in general very beneficial in Scurvice and

³ Peyes read it in 1800.
⁴ Urpolarit's translation of books 1 and 11 was first printed in 1863; It was again, published, with his translation of book 111 and a file of Rubsinie by the adder Metasex, in 1891....4, and with books 11 and 1 translated by Metasex, in 1700.

Dropales and that for Rheums in the Eyes and the Head a loaf of Tobacco put into the Nostrile for an Hour each Morning is a Specifick Medicine.

In the cases Of Gardening written in 1685, Temple gives an agreeable account of his own garden at Shoon, which was renowned for its fruit trees, discoursing of his grapes and figs, his peaches for its from creek discoursing of the grapes and applied as present applied, with that completent sense of superiority which is the folble of most gardeners. The cassy cuttled Gost, written in 1977 gives much information as to various cures for that metady of statemen, and, incidentally introduces us to several of Temples or mancament, once in a new and entertaining light. Temples style was highly thought of in his own day It is generally believed, said Swift, that this author has advanced our English tongue to as groat perfection as it can well bear But this is the crasgorated praise of an editor Lambs plain, natural, chit-chat is nearer the mark. Temple writes like a fine gentleman at his case, without any affectation, but with counterable negligence His syntax is sometimes faulty and his expression does not always fit his thought Though his soutcomes are kept, as a rule, within convenient bounds, they straggle occasionally and leave trailing cude To agree wholly with Johnson that Temple was the first writer who gare cadence to English prose, is to forget Browne and Taylor but Temple has a true feeling for cadence in this alone he is Cowley's superior. It is largely through this quality that he rises at times beyond the level of matural chit-chat, as in the fine parage in praise of poetry and music which concludes the carry Upon Poetry and ends with the often quoted comparison between human life and a froward child. Like Cowley Temple came under the spell of Montaigne. In the casesy Of Gardening he borrows from him the story of Heraclitus playing with the boys in the porch of the Temple, and he refers to him in two later casays, Upon Popular Discontents and Upon Health and Long Lyc. Moreover two camps, heads for which were found among his papers, Upon the different conditions of his and fortune and Upon Compensation, august, not only in the filles, but in the subjects themselves, frequent intercourse with the father of the carry There were other Englishmen of letters, too who kept the same excellent company Dryden quotes from Honest Montaigne in the preface to All for Love' while, account ing to Pope, Montaigne and La Rochefoucauld were among the deres de cheres with which Wycherley was wont to read himself to sleep. In 1685, Montaigne was popular enough in England to warrant the publication of a new translation of his essays from the pen of Charles Cotton. Cotton sometimes misses his author's meaning, but he does not write sheer nonsense, as Florio sometimes does. On the other hand, his style lacks the glamour and quaint individuality of the Elizabethan translation, and, though sound on the whole, is somewhat unequal. His work is dedicated to George Savile, marquis of Halifax, who, in acknowledging the dedication, says that 'it is the book in the world I am best entertained with.

Halifax's own Muccilonies, first collected in 1700 are, for the most part, political pamphlets, but a few words concerning them may perhaps not imappropriately find a place here. For his finest plece of writing is his praise of truth in The Character of a Trammer-a passage worthy of Montaigne, whom Halifax also resembles in his bold and happy use of metaphor Although this famous pamphlet, which, notwithstanding its substantial length, must have circulated largely between the date of its composition (early in 1685) and that of its first nublication (April 1688), was then sacribed on the title-pare to Sir William Coventry there can be no doubt that it was by Halifax, who owned it to his friends¹
The title was suggested to him by a paper by his subsequent adversary L'Estrange but the use made of the term trimmer and the lesson read to the nation on the ever old and ever new truth that there are times when the ship of state has to be steadied against the excesses of each of the two extremes, must alike be placed to the credit of Halifax himself. Few publications of the kind. intended to allay not to heighten or inflame, the changes of an important crisis, have exercised a more direct effect.

The death of Charles II put an end to the trimmer's plan of inducing the king to free himself from an overbearing influence which had now become sovereign authority. Halfax appears to have consoled himself by composing his admirable Character of King Charles the Second, which was not published, with an appendix of Political, Moral and Miscellaneous Thoughts and Reflections, till 1750. The literature of characters, which the circumstances of the times and the art of both historians and satirists had brought to a great height of perfection, received a notable addition in this admirable portrait, by a man of the world, of a prince whom be thoroughly understood and for whom their instruments. Cowley only played on his for a brief moment. but Dryden a mastery became more and more perfect till in the hast year of the century be produced his masterplece in the other harmony of prose the Preface to the Fables. In its rambling -and in the pleasant intrusion of his own personality Dryden a own-short and well balanced sentences, restraint, lu-numerous digressions - the nature of a Preface, he says, is it reminds one harmily of Montaigne. But the style is all oldity and precision, a tone of friendly intercourse with the reader an case which never becomes familiarity and a dimnity which never stiffens into nomposity. When nine years later Steele wrote the first number of The Tatler he found an instrument ready to his hand. Steele s style suggests Dryden, just as Addi son a model in the first paper which he contributed to the same journal is obviously Cowley Steele and Addison addressed themselves to a wider audience than Dryden, not only to acholars and with and courtiers, but to ordinary middle-class citizens, they made the essay lighter and introduced into it humour and a spice of malice. But they were not the creators either of the essay or of modern pross. The foundations of most of the literature of the first half of the eighteenth century were already laid down in the seventeenth. Dryden not only dominates his own age, but throws his shadow over the next.

Bes quoistion from Seviliens sy Formon, H. C., The Lif and Letters of Six George Sarile Bart, first Margain of Halifets (1998), vol. 12, p. 277

¹ Cf. carte above r. p. 62.

CAMBRIDGE | PRINTED BY W LEWIS, MA AT THE UNIVERSITY PARM